Are you tracking mentions about your brand? The solution for this dilemma is to create specific questions with a clear objective. Why should you gather customer feedback? Voice of customers can become one of your most powerful weapons if you want to increase your bottom line and create positive experiences. This way you can align your offer to their needs and increase brand loyalty. Worried about negative consumer backlash? Collecting criticism shows you what needs to be changed but feedback form is also a great outlet for you users. Take a look at the list of useful customer feedback questions you can implement on your own website in just minutes: Ask about your website: When asking people about your website, you should avoid general questions and rather ask about specific elements. What task did you want to accomplish on this website? This might turn out to be a valuable suggestion for your product new features or website structure. Were you able to find the information you were looking for on our website? Did you find that information valuable? Questions like that can help you quickly assess the information architecture of your website. The value of information is a simple indicator if your content is useful for the customers. How much effort did you personally have to put forth to handle your request? How did this effort compare to your expectations? Asking about expectation gives you additional insights about your brand. Maybe visitors, in fact, expect a lot of effort when dealing with your advanced product? If their solution is easier to handle in the eyes of the users, you will be losing potential customers to your opponents. How visually appealing is our website? How easy is it to navigate our website? What do you think about the story we tell through our website? When you ask direct questions, you minimize the risk of making bad website redesign decisions. In order to do that you can ask them to choose from different mood icons. Is our pricing clear? How can we improve our pricing page? What originally attracted you to our website? First impressions are extremely important for web visitors. Knowing how you made people stay on your website gives you that extra knowledge for your next website tweaks. If you were to review the website what score would you give it out of 5? When asking a rating question you can also additionally ask why have you given this score? You can also change the scale to 10 points, but scale performs better. What did you like best about our website? This question is a good way of identifying selling points of your page. Do you have any other comments, questions, or concerns? Open question like that give you a chance to find out about bugs and other problems with your website. Ask about your product: How likely is it that you would recommend this company to a friend or colleague? A similar way to evaluate brand loyalty would be to ask: When looking for this product, how likely are you to consider our company first? There are several basic questions that can give you interesting and sometimes surprising insights about your own company: How did you hear about us? This question is a great way of evaluating your marketing channels and helps you decide what to focus on in your advertising efforts. Why did you choose us as your service provider? Is it the informative website? Is it a savvy salesman? Is it great online reputation? Ask this question and see what or who brings you the most value. What problem would you like to solve with our product? Knowing what kind of solution people are seeking in your product helps you focus on its strongest features or decide which direction to go in product development process. What would you say to someone who asked about us? A question like that, however, allows you to find out what your customers think of you, an extremely important insight in the digital environment where perception is reality. If you were unhappy with us what can we do to get you to come back? This question gives you a chance to uncover any customer issues and mend them before they go viral. What is the primary benefit that you have received from our company? What features could you not live without? Asking questions like that is the easiest way to evaluate your killer features. Using the analytics, you know which features are popular but customer feedback informs you which feature is the most important. What features could you live without? Keep it simple stupid! You probably know and live by this rule. When it comes to your own product, however, you might be tempted to exaggerate. This old adage helps you identify the overkill features. Ask About Your Competition: Chances are, you have done your own market research and know who are the biggest players in your niche. Your customers, however, have their own opinion about this. This is yet another chance to reconsider the features of your product and the way they are showcased on your website: Who can we learn from? What would you use as an alternative if our company was no longer available? What makes us stand out from the competition? Compared to our competitors, is our product quality better, worse, or about the same? Compared to our competitors, are our prices higher, lower, or about the same? Ask in the right way When creating a customer feedback form remember about clarity of questions, but also keep in mind that the tone should be conversational. This way, you are more likely to engage customers who will, in turn, provide you with specific and helpful feedback. In order to keep things interesting for the respondents, you can use different question types. Open questions work when you want your visitors to express their opinion. Sliders are useful for grading tasks and closed dropdowns allow you to limit the options when asking, for example, about how users heard about your product. If you are giving users two-three answer options, consider using radio-button questions. What is more, engaging and usable feedback survey is a way to establish better relationship with a user. Relationship that makes it more likely to turn this user into a customer. You can view that here. Try unamo seo for free.

As we continue our look at the Nationals roster position-by-position, we turn our attention towards the starting pitching, which can best be defined as Max Scherzer and everyone else. Starting Pitching Max Scherzer Age: Every fifth night in D. These numbers would suggest a higher win total than the 18 he garnered this season same can be said about But, an inconsistent offense was the demise of one of the best pitchers in Major League Baseball. His numbers this season were extremely similar to his back-to-back Cy Young awards the past two years. Already he is lined up as a finalist for the NL Cy Young award for this season. His strikeouts and Were it not for the ridiculous numbers Jacob deGrom put up , Scherzer would be in line for his fourth Cy Young. Next season is when Scherzer gets a big pay increase. It is near impossible to argue that the ace is not worth the money. Getting a win in five straight starts reminded us of the variety that he is able to command over the plate. He would be an okay No. The injuries that led to this is not necessarily his fault. He was always behind. At 32, he has been on the Nationals for six years now with three really good seasons and three blah seasons. It is imperative in that he has another good season before entering free agency. Another injury-plagued season inhibited the former No. This season was the worst WHIP of his career at 1. He could not stop guys from hitting to get on base. Washington needed another repeat performance of where he finished third in the Cy Young voting. Instead, he had to take breaks for multiple injuries throughout the year. Injuries will always circle around the conversation of Strasburg. If healthy which is a big if , he still is the Nationals best option aside from Scherzer. Based on his progression from Tommy John surgery in , this year looks just like an anomaly. It is hard to tell though given the history and how certain situations transpired. While he did not get far into games, manager Davey Martinez knew the limitations of his starter. Every night he typically got to the sixth inning using a fair amount of pitches but was able to manage his base runners. Some nights he was a pleasant surprise in the rotation and kept the game competitive. That is more than most of the non-Scherzer starts from this rotation. Nevertheless, he is a free agent for Given the bigger question marks behind Scherzer in the rotation, he is not likely to return to Washington given its needs. If he does return, then expect him to be called on to be a regular starter. Only once did he make it to the seventh inning. His second stint as a starter in September was far better than his stretch in the first half of the season. Next season expect him to be with the Nats more than in the minors and be the plug-in guy in the rotation. This year though was extremely ugly. All of his losses in the second half of the season were terrible, not something you can afford from a guy that is supposed to be third on the depth chart. It got to the point that every time he left the mound, it was because the Nats were out of contention in that game. Trading Gonzalez for prospects made sense once the Nationals fell out of contention. The only way that would reasonably happen though is if he signed for less money than his previous contract. Another, more desperate team will likely throw money at his feet.
