

Christmas Favorites Book 1 - Book/GM Disk Pack by Phillip Keveren, Fred Kern, Mona Rejino 1 edition - first published in More Popular Piano Solos - Level 3.

Asterisks mark actors listed in the opening credits as "Additional Voices". However, after the disappointing reaction to The Sword in the Stone, Walt Disney decided to become more involved in the story than he had been with the past two films, [10] with his nephew Roy E. Disney saying that "[he] certainly influenced everything about it. With Jungle Book, he obviously got hooked on the jungle and the characters that lived there. Following suggestions, Peet also created two original characters: The human girl for which Mowgli falls in love, as the animators considered that falling in love would be the best excuse for Mowgli to leave the jungle; and Louie, king of the monkeys. Louie was a less comical character, enslaving Mowgli trying to get the boy to teach him to make fire. Peet refused, and after a long argument, Peet left the Disney studio in January. This was because Disney felt that the story should be kept simple, and the characters should drive the story. Disney took an active role in the story meetings, acting out each role and helping to explore the emotions of the characters, help create gags and develop emotional sequences. The story artists then discussed how to fill the scenes, including the comedic gags to employ. When Phil Harris did the voice of Baloo, he gave it a bubble of life. Disney suggested Harris after meeting him at a party. This was her last film before she died. Disney lightened it up by having the vultures bearing a physical and vocal resemblance to The Beatles, including the signature mop-top haircut. However, Walt decided to cut the character for feeling that the film had already much action with the monkeys and vultures. The animation was done by xerography, with character design, led by Ken Anderson, employing rough, artistic edges in contrast to the round animals seen in productions such as Dumbo. Two of the cues were reused from previous Disney films. Longtime Disney collaborator Gilkyson was the first songwriter to bring several complete songs which followed the book closely but Walt Disney felt that his efforts were too dark. The Sherman Brothers were then brought in to do a complete rewrite. Disney said the "nice, mysterious, heavy stuff" from both works was not what he aimed for, instead going for a "lightness, a Disney touch". As of , The Jungle Book held the record for the best-selling home video release in the United Kingdom, ahead of Titanic which sold 4.
