Rosie" of the 82nd Airborne Division, who fell 74 years ago in the attempt to break through against the Germans known as Operation Market Garden. The unsuccessful operation was made into the movie "A Bridge Too Far. Their efforts connected them with an intrepid Dutch researcher, Ben Overland, who had found a crude map of a farmhouse where Rosenkrantz fell in a firefight. Phillip Rosenkrantz, said, "This is a day I have been hoping for over 20 years. We now have some closure," The Los Angeles Times reported. It means a great deal to us to have his unit represented, presenting his awards," Dr. Rosenkrantz said in a statement. Joe Buccino, the division historian, said in a statement delivered at the ceremony. Rosie began in , when he parachuted into Sicily with the th. He and another 82nd soldier, Cpl. Lee Black, were blown off course. They landed next to about Italian troops and were briefly captured. The Italians then decided to surrender to the two Americans, Buccino said. Back home, banner headlines in the Los Angeles newspapers read, "L. The 82nd was led at the time by the legendary Maj. Rosenkrantz was killed by a machine-gun burst. From to , Canadian, Dutch and American Graves Registration teams were active in the area where Rosenkrantz died; the Dutch team found his dog tags. There were also sparse remains, but they were unidentifiable, the DPAA said. Unknown to the search teams, a Canadian team earlier had collected remains from the area around Groesbeek and buried them at the Canadian National Cemetery as unknowns. The search lost traction for decades. Rosenkrantz eventually set up a website to aid in the search for his uncle. Buccino, the 82nd historian, said Rosenkrantz had been one of from the division still missing from World War II, including Brig. Charles "Bull" Keerans, the highest-ranking U. As a nation, we must commit to finding all of them. In a letter from Naples in December , he wrote: Just like at home. A little frost in the morning, then a bright clear sun, the rest of the day. At least we hope so. It rained about 26 days out of the last month. Not continual, but during some part of the day. This is sunny Italy all right, but the sun comes in such small bunches and everytime it rains the snow gets a little lower on the mountains. Might have a white Christmas yet. We trade some stuff we would ordinarily throw away. These people really are poor. They even put patches on patches. Hope you are all the same. So long and good luck. This story has been updated to show Rosenkrantz was held back from the D-Day landings, not his division.
