

Chapter 1 : Your Partner Wants To Move To The Suburbs; You Want A City Life | Black News Zone

Comprehensive, fascinating, and full of lively debate and history, "Roughing it in the Suburbs" provides a cultural study that weaves together a history of "Chatelaine's" producer's, consumers, and text.

Nayâ€”you need to stay in the city. But he says he needs less congestion, noise pollution, and traffic. They wanted to wind up in the same place, of course, but their ideas of the perfect place to live were vastly different. People get tired of city life. People can become exhausted by the fact that their calendar is always full, and they struggle to even make all of those appointments because of traffic. But some people feel a deep connection to the cityâ€”like it feels their heartbeat. Find some affordable, quiet towns you can escape to for weekend getaways every six to eight weeks. Maybe just knowing that a break from the city is around the corner, and will be regular, can be enough. It could just be a nature fix your partner is after. This may not put off his desire to leave the city forever but it could work for a while. The real estate featuring attached garage, picture windows and a well landscaped front yard and driveway. Buy in the suburbs; rent your city spot If you can financially swing it, buy a place in the suburbs and rent out or sublet your place in the city. It can be important for you to know that you still have that connection to the city. There are ways to make it work. Consider moving somewhere closer to his work. Perhaps, if you could be comfortable moving to the suburbs in five years, that will be good enough for him. So let him take it. Maybe you can be that couple who is really into roughing it in the woods. Learn about the gear and become regulars at the wilderness stores. A slower pace of life could be all your partner needs. Ask yourself if you must be in the city for your work. If you work remotely and can work anywhere, or your company could relocate you, it could be worth it to agree to live in the suburbs for just a few years. You can see how you feel after that. You love the city but could you be happy there without your partner? If not, and he needs to leave, then you have your answer.
