Chapter 1 : List of Shadowrun books - Wikipedia

Seattle is a state of the UCAS on the Pacific Coast separated from the rest of the country by the Native American calendrierdelascience.come itself is located in the middle of Salish-Shidhe, its access to the Pacific Ocean passing through Salish-Shidhe waters in the Puget Sound and Juan de Fuca Strait.

Dec 29, David Sarkies rated it liked it Recommends it for: My Shadowrun Group Seattle in the s 29 December I have noted that the only review of this book indicates how much the authors did not know about Seattle and suggested that none of them have ever been there, let alone lived there. I do sort of wonder why this one city was picked out of all of the West Coast cities to be a major setting for the Shadowrun game. I guess because the way they have designed the world Seattle had simply become a frontier town again, basically a city state that is surrounded by Nat Seattle in the s 29 December I have noted that the only review of this book indicates how much the authors did not know about Seattle and suggested that none of them have ever been there, let alone lived there. I guess because the way they have designed the world Seattle had simply become a frontier town again, basically a city state that is surrounded by Native American tribes who had managed to rise up and overthrow their oppressors by bringing magic back into the world. The other reason is probably because Seattle is a major city that is quite a long way from many of the other major centres of the United States, sitting alone up in the northwestern corner of the continent. This book simply details the Seattle sprawl region by region and sort of provides a lot of detail as to what can be found in this city as well as providing hints for possible adventures. I suspect, though, if they wanted people bad enough, they would send enough fire power into the region to try to deal with it. I have noted that they do mention Microsoft in this particular sourcebook, but it sounds as if Microsoft, by this time, has lost its dominant place in the corporate structure. This is not surprising, and I believe that it happens all the time. I remember when Yahoo was the search engine, and it was the search engine right up until Google came onto the scene, and now it is struggling to survive and making deals with other companies to stay afloat. Google has managed to survive against the onslaught of Facebook, because all of the sudden, these social media sites are pretty much shutting out the rest of the internet and the traditional search engines are struggling to survive. However, interestingly Google have branched out into other areas, which include cloud computing with their Google Drive, and also operating systems with their android smartphone technology. Microsoft is still struggling to keep up. Another thing about this world is the idea of the archologies. These are massive buildings that are owned by a corporation. Basically people wage slaves and salari-men live, work, and pretty much spend their entire life in these complexes. There is no need to go outside because the corporation provides everything. We have towns like that out in the mining regions of Australia, where the company gives subsidies to people who they want there, and pretty much run a monopoly on everything. However, it is interesting how times have changed in that Japan is suffering from a severe bout of stagflation, and the whole Japanese dominance that seems to have been the belief back in the nineties has failed to materialise. What we are seeing now is not so much a Japanese century, and the beginnings of a Chinese century. While newer editions do a better job of getting the character of the city in the text the Seattle Sourcebook seemed to be written by people who had never been here.
