After landing a job as a journalist, his editor sends Clay to cover the increasing tension between conservationists and developers over environmental issues in the Hill Country. Clay unexpectedly encounters Mary Frances Wiley, a young widow who operates a canoe livery on the river. Drought conditions have lowered tourism visits and her revenue stream to the point she cannot pay the bank note. She is battling to keep her land from being sold to oil interests bent on using pipeline right-of-way to pump oil across the fragile Hill Country. The physical attraction between these two causes sexual tension throughout the novel. Clay meets Sharkbait Guy, an experienced outdoors writer, who helps Clay with his assignment. The body of a brutally slashed teenager is discovered on the river. The Hispanic girl who was with him is missing. Her uncle, Deputy Sheriff Julio Ramirez, is on a personal quest to find his niece. He has eyewitness testimony that the leader of a local gang threatened to kill the boy seen with his niece and is searching the area for evidence of the Banditos. Deputy Ramirez is also engaged with battling prejudices within the department while racked with worry about his wife who lingers in a hospital, brain-shot from an ambush meant for him. Sharkbait, Deputy Ramirez, Mary Frances and Clay team up to thwart the oil interest takeover of her land and to uncover the killer. This is Texasâ€™ a state of private landholders who jealously guard access to their property. On sweltering summer weekends residents of the big cities spill into the countryside seeking water recreation on rivers, lakes, pools, and along the coast. Developers circle unsuspecting prey to pitch a piece of Hill Country ownership, neglecting to mention water rights, depleted aquifers, and fragile ecosystems while landowners along the rivers deal with litter, trespassing, and disrespect for private property. The emerging story is excuse enough for Clay to stay as he and Mary Frances grow closer together. The bank threatens to sell the note to Bert Taylor, local investor who has discovered there is abandoned pipeline right-of-way that crosses her property. If he can secure the property he can use the right-of-way to move oil across the Hill Country and save time and transportation costs to get product to Houston refineries. Another tourist dies and tourism comes to a standstill. On the brink of bankruptcy she turns to Clay for help. Together the four new friends become a formidable team for justice.

Our intimate, beautiful secret place where we fellowship and commune with Him, where we walk with Him in the cool of the day and He shares the secrets of His heart. If the enemy can attack that place, then things start to go haywire. The divine insight, clarity, revelation and unlocking of keys in the Word of God that is going to be released will be so significant, all of hell is terrified, shaking in fear of what the Lord is going to release upon the earth through the body of Christ. The enemy is attempting to hinder the flow of revelation. He is attempting to steal revelation of the Word and revelation that has flowed from the heart of God through fear, intimidation, confusion, doubt and suspicion. God is far away. The Lord is close, and is inviting you to a deeper place than you have been before. There is significant outpouring of His Spirit about to be released in your secret place and all of hell is terrified of it, so they are fighting it. The haze will suddenly clear. The fog of confusion will lift and the fear will dissipate revealing the true reality of what God is wanting to show you. Instantly, when I looked at these treasure chests, I KNEW they represented revelation, riches of blessing, insight and overflow that the Lord has planned to release to His people. As vicious as they were, I suddenly felt the atmosphere shift to see as He sees and it was clear, in the eyes of these vicious black dogs, the fear that was in THEIR eyes. It was time to move deeper into the place where the Lord would reveal the hidden things. He would reveal things His people do not yet know. There was such life, provision, and depth beaming from this treasure chest. It is He who reveals the profound and hidden things; He knows what is in the darkness, And the light dwells with Him. Do not move from your decree. I watched as these vicious dogs of doom that were barking loudly, started to lose their ground and flicker. They were flickering like holograms and eventually dissipated. My people are going to begin to see heavenly realities and insights that are not yet seen in the natural realm, but will begin to call them into being and call things forth that are have not even been dreamed or imagined as they live deeper in the place of intimacy with Me and deeper revelation. There is a fresh wave of His Spirit bringing greater empowerment and strength to you. I prophesy over you in Jesus name, where the enemy has attempted to weary you and has wearied you and caused you to feel like you are barely walking on the ground, the power of His Spirit is supercharging you, renewing your youth, and you will FLY! You will FLY like an eagle in the sky. In the rest of God. In the insight of God. In the wind of His Spirit and go further and higher than you have been. Stand on what He has said and watch those vicious dogs of doom begin to disappear in Jesus name, and a whole new world of revelatory treasure and flow of prophetic revelation open up to you in your garden place of communion with Jesus. Chapter 3 : Sever the Darkness by Les Coalson

Sever the Darkness is a compelling thriller set on the Guadalupe River in Texas. Those interested in environmental issues from a conservative point of view will love this writer. He presents environmental concerns with balance.

Frustrated, he came back to the idea of filming a fairy tale or mythological story. For inspiration, Scott read all the classic fairy tales, including ones by the Brothers Grimm. Scott asked him if he was interested in writing a fairy tale. He was already writing some and agreed. In January, just before beginning principal photography on Blade Runner, Scott spent five weeks with Hjortsberg working out a rough storyline for what was then called Legend of Darkness. Originally, Scott "only had the vague notion of something in pursuit of the swiftest steed alive which, of course, was the unicorn". Hjortsberg suggested plunging the world into wintery darkness. Initially, the quest was longer, but it was eventually substantially reduced. Scott wanted to avoid too many subplots that departed from the main story and go for a "more contemporary movement rather than get bogged down in too classical a format". The two men went through 15 script revisions. However, Scott eventually replaced Lee with Assheton Gorton, a production designer whom he had wanted for both Alien and Blade Runner. Scott hired Gorton because he knew "all the pitfalls of shooting exteriors on a soundstage. We both knew that whatever we did would never look absolutely real, but would very quickly gain its own reality and dispense with any feeling of theatricality". Edlund considered shooting on 70 mm film stock, taking the negative, and reducing the actors to any size they wanted—but this was deemed too expensive. Thus, Scott was tasked with finding an ensemble of small actors. The crew spent 14 weeks constructing the forest set, and Scott was worried that it would not look real enough. It was only days before the start of principal photography that it looked good enough to film. The trees were 60 feet high with trunks 30 feet in diameter and were sculpted out of polystyrene built onto tubular scaffolding frames. He thought the actor would be ideal to play Darkness because the actor had film and theatrical experience. After wrapping his work with Carpenter, Bottin met with Scott to reduce the thousands of creatures suggested by the script, to a manageable quantity. The process would involve complicated prosthetic makeup that would be worn for up to 60 days with some full body prosthetics. Bottin divided his facility into different shops in order to cover the immense workload. At one point, Curry got too impatient and claustrophobic and pulled the makeup off too quickly, tearing off his own skin in the process. Scott had to shoot around the actor for a week as a result. Reportedly, flames from the set fire leapt more than feet into the air and the clouds of smoke could be seen five miles away. Cruise did all his own diving and swimming in waters that, according to Scott, had real alligators 25 feet from where they were filming. However, it was decided that the audience had to work too much to be entertained, and another 20 minutes was cut. At the time, Scott said, "European audiences are more sophisticated. They accepted preambles and subtleties whereas the U. This print had minor visual anomalies that were eventually digitally replaced, occasionally with finished shots from the minute U. Soundtrack[edit] Due to the changes in the film from its European and American releases, Legend has two different soundtracks. The second soundtrack features music by German electronic artists Tangerine Dream and was used for the initial theatrical and home video releases in the United States. Mia Sara provided some of the singing, while session singers provided vocals wherever Sara was unable to perform. The first sung version was cut from all editions of the film as it accompanied a scene with Jack and the fairies that was itself cut; the final sung version by the National Philharmonic Chorus is heard over the end credits. The following songs appeared in the minute U. A promotional music video presumably for the U. The video, which incorporates Ferry and guitarist David Gilmour into footage from the film, is included as a bonus on disc 2 of the "Ultimate Edition" DVD release. In doing research on this, I had been in contact with a certifiable Legend fanatic named Sean Murphy, who runs the Legend FAQ along with Geoff Wright, and based in part on his info, and a lot of background from Legend editor, Terry Rawlings, I realized that we were looking for one of three cuts. Credit really needs to be given to Garth Thomas for breaking the case.

Chapter 4 : SEVER THE TIES | Excarnate

The darkness slowly drew back into the blade, roiling over itself, and the blade shone that much brighter until Regina couldn't see anything besides the blade and, just beyond, Emma's face, twisted in agony.

Severn claims Lou Thesz as an influence to professional wrestling. Severn suffered more injuries in professional wrestling than Mixed Martial Arts. In his debut match on November 25, , he defeated Yuko Miyato. However the match ended in a no contest thus saw Beldam retain the title. Severn was ranked No. Severn had not signed a contract with WWF by this point. Ken won the match with a belly-to-belly suplex. After the match, the two had a stare down and eventually shook hands. In his debut match, he defeated Flash Funk in quick fashion. He was briefly managed by Jim Cornette and who commentated during his matches and helped " get him over ". His character was portrayed as a heel villain. Like Flash Funk, he defeated multiple opponents afterwards, the likes of Savio Vega and Mosh , in quick fashion and by showing some of his Mixed Martial style and ability. This led to a winning streak. Barry Windham was also a member. Severn would tag team with these members from the stable. Severn would then leave the stable soon after to continue further singles competition on his own. During his one-year tenure, he competed in the Brawl for All tournament, a legitimate shoot boxing competition beating The Godfather in the first round. However, he withdrew prior to the quarterfinals , allowing The Godfather to advance by default. I Will in a squash match. He would win the match by disqualification, meaning Brown retained the championship. Later that year he was involved in a storyline with Owen Hart, where Hart caused an kayfabe injury to the neck of Severn, via a piledriver. He left WWF due creative differences. His last match was on the following Raw, where Steve Blackman defeated Severn via disqualification. In house shows leading up to this, Blackman would defeat Severn every time. According to Severn, WWF asked to him to tattoo "" on his forehead "the mark of the beast" and become an Undertaker disciple, presumably as part of his Ministry of Darkness stable forming during that time. Severn, in a recorded interview stated that the talent of the locker room was scared of him. He said he noticed this when they referred to him as "Mr. Severn" and thought it was a " rib " joke as well as wrestlers avoiding him. He asked one of the talent and they responded saying "You scare us. This title reign was controversial and short-lived, as the title was stripped from Severn when he was unable to appear on the inaugural NWA-TNA pay-per-view to defend his title; the belt was won that evening by Ken Shamrock. Utilizing the many students at his pro wrestling school Michigan Sports Camps , they created the now popular promotion running on a monthly basis. He was a referee for Price of Glory Merry Massacre in In Severn wrestled on AWE, the television series which had 1 season and 7 episodes on the fight network. After this, the AWE folded due to financial issues. Both competitors cut a promo on each other, Dan worked as the face meanwhile Johnny worked as a heel. Johnny, who had the Price of Glory heavyweight championship defended the title in this match. After a technical match-up, Severn came out as the victor and won the Price of Glory Heavyweight championship. The show ended with the two wrestlers showing respect to each other and the roster coming out in respect of the end of Dynamos career. Severn was knocked out of the tournament in the semi finals in a fatal four-way match when Raymond Rowe was the victor against Dan, Tim Donst and Tracey Williams. He has four brothers. He and his four brothers were All-American wrestlers in high school and college. His son, David Severn, is a professional and amateur wrestler. Gold and hopes to defeat the darkness for good. This is an alternate take on the end of season 5A. There is Captain Swan, but a heavy focus on Swan Queen friendship. Fiction T - English - Emma S. You have no power any more. What could you possibly offer me? You never know when you might need a favor. Gold dodged again, but hit a display case and went down. Hook took a step and loomed over Gold. Behind Hook, Gold struggled to stand, leaning heavily on the display case. A glass vial rattled toward the edge, and Gold grabbed for it before it could fall. Hook pointed the sword toward her and she stopped. Mary Margaret said, "Gold! She twisted a hand toward Gold just before Hook turned back around. It shattered and released a swirl of dust that climbed up Killian, freezing him where he stood. She looked past Mary Margaret and David, to Regina. Emma turned toward him again. Traversing realms would be nothing. We could leave this place, go anywhere, do anything. Then she shook her head. She hefted the sword. The ground shook and darkness poured out of Killian, wrapping around the sword, flowing up the blade and across the hilt before grabbing hold of Emma, who shook with the force of it. She kept the blade as steady as she could and kept her eyes on Killian as he collapsed at her feet. As the darkness left him, his expression lightened until the darkness was all absorbed by Emma. She lingered a moment, then straightened and stood. She held up the sword in front of her. The light glinted off the one name on the blade-Emma Swan-and for a moment the darkness swam in her eyes. Then she turned back to her family and the darkness abated. I need your help. Emma held out the sword. Prove me right again. It would be so easy Emma closed her eyes and when she opened them again they were clear. She held out a hand, and Regina grasped it. The sword will allow you to cut the darkness from me and draw it back into the sword. The sword severs, and the cup will keep the power contained. It makes a difference. If taking the power from Killian had been violent, it was nothing on this. The darkness ripped out of her, coming in wave after wave, flowing around them both but never touching them, always being drawn back into the sword. Pictures fell off the wall, heavy books and miscellanea crashed off shelves. Outside, a cacophony of alarms filled the air. It felt and sounded like Storybrooke was shaking apart beneath their feet. And still the darkness came. Finally the darkness slowed, the brightness dimming, little by little. They were almost done-just a little more, and Emma would be free- Emma dropped her hands, whispered, "Enough. She wanted to leave some of the darkness inside herself, wanted to have the same choice that anyone else did, to choose between the light and the dark. Regina nodded and pulled out the sword. Emma went white and collapsed. It bounced-once, twice, and then it began to spin, faster and faster, until it was a blur. Regina grabbed for Emma and pulled her away. As she watched, the sword folded in on itself, becoming a shapeless thing, and then reforming into a cup. It hovered in midair for a second and then settled onto the ground. It was, inexplicably, full of water. Gold gave the grail a long, hard look. Regina too was caught by it. She stepped back again just as Gold stepped forward. A length of cloth appeared between her fingers. Using the cloth, she carefully picked up the grail, careful not to tip it. Without the grail, Regina noticed that the shop seemed different somehow. Almost nothing was where it ought to be-trinkets were smashed on the floor or in their cases. Books were flung haphazardly everywhere. There were cracks in the plaster. Outside, the alarms were dying, one by one. He opened the door, having to jerk it out of its frame, and they stepped into the late afternoon sun. One store looked like it had crumbled into dust. On the next corner, the clock tower had fallen into the street, narrowly missing a parked car. A new crack in the pavement ran up the street. But the rest of the place looked more or less whole. Mary Margaret took a breath. Gold, do you-" David stopped, puzzled. Down the street, another alarm began blaring. Even with the cloth around it, it wasâ€ potent. Andâ€ well, pretty much everyone. Emma said, "I checked on Henry, too-the school is fine. He wasâ€ pretty happy to see me. Emma turned her head and that same softness reached her eyes. But I trusted you. Unlike giving everyone back their memories. Unlike-" Regina knew she was thinking about Hook. She was rewarded by an amused huff from Emma.
