Cesar Hallelujah is your typical busboy working at a typical restaurant. Mainly my own made-up sillies and drawings of Spider-Man and Iron-Man. Various random work, T-shirt illustrations for bands, Box-art for toys, etc. I actually did a box-art for a Transformers toy through Dreamwave. I think my style needs a little tightening before I could tackle a mainstream book successfully. Having an inker is a good start. Wing-Wang is my usual style, with exaggerated proportions, angles, etc. Typically very extreme and all over. I only named these two styles because it was easy and convenient. And he has a big amazing scarf always validating his cool ratio. Obviously, this meant two things for me when creating my own awesome ninja-like character 1 he must shred all, 2 he must have a radical scarf. Capcom 2 and not reflect all that mayhem in my own work. Like, she does like Sharknife, but that automatically translates to liking Cesar. Cesar consciously controls Sharknife via his own free will, so he really is Sharknife. Actually, in Volume 2, a couple things happen to Cesar that prove how awesome he is, with or without Sharknife. First half, second half. So, in his mind, the best way to fix that situation is to riddle it with monsters! He has two henchmen who help him in monster production. Sharknife fights a polar bear in volume 1 at one point. Well, I guess you could consider that seafood. I consider myself amazingly lucky to be in league with these people I call my friends. Further, seeing them take their own strides into comic-dom and inevitable utter success, cos their books rule! They made it look easy. Is Sharknife really going to be all kinds of sweetness? A buffet of graphic ninja rawk? And for more "Sharknife" Sassiness Go to Sharknife. Sweetness, go to Ninja Rage. Fetish, go to Oni Press. Hitting stores March 30th,
