

Chapter 1 : Singing in the Dark () - Plot Summary - IMDb

Singing in the Dark 1h 24min | Drama, Crime, Music | 7 March (USA) Leo is a holocaust survivor who suffers from total amnesia; he comes to the U.S. and works as a hotel desk clerk.

Here are a few excerpts that I particularly enjoyed: It was created by a friend of mine, the Danish artist Johan Bentin, who was the first stake president in Copenhagen, Denmark. Entrance to Enlightenment, oil on board, by Johan H. It is interesting to me that the light coming through the door does not illuminate the entire room—only the space immediately in front of the door. To me, the darkness and light in this painting are a metaphor for life. It is part of our condition as mortal beings to sometimes feel as though we are surrounded by darkness. We might have lost a loved one; a child might have strayed; we might have received a troubling medical diagnosis; we might have employment challenges and be burdened by doubts or fears; or we might feel alone or unloved. But even though we may feel lost in the midst of our current circumstances, God promises the hope of His light—He promises to illuminate the way before us and show us the way out of darkness. A Light in Africa. Some years ago my wife, Harriet, and I had a memorable experience. We were in West Africa, a beautiful part of the world where the Church is growing and the Latter-day Saints are delightful. However, West Africa also has many challenges. In particular, I was sorrowed by the poverty that I saw. In the cities there is high unemployment, and families often struggle to provide for their daily needs and for their safety. It broke my heart to know that many of our precious members of the Church live in such deprivation. But I also learned that these fine members help each other to lighten their heavy burdens. We eventually arrived at one of our meetinghouses near a large city. But instead of finding a people burdened and absorbed by darkness, we discovered a joyful people who were radiating with light! The happiness they felt for the gospel was contagious and lifted our spirits. The love they expressed for us was humbling. Their smiles were genuine and infectious. I remember wondering at the time if there could possibly be a happier people on the face of the planet. Even though these dear Saints were surrounded by difficulties and trials, they were filled with light! The meeting began, and I started to speak. But soon the power went out in the building, and we were left in complete darkness. For a while I could hardly see anyone in the congregation, but I could see and feel the brilliant and beautiful smiles of our Saints. Oh, how I loved being with these wonderful people! The darkness in the chapel continued, and so I sat next to my wife and waited for the power to be restored. As we waited, something remarkable happened. A few voices began singing one of the hymns of the Restoration. And then others joined in. Soon, a sweet and overwhelming chorus of voices filled the chapel. These members of the Church did not need hymnbooks; they knew every word of every hymn they sang. And they sang one song after another with an energy and spirit that touched my soul. Eventually, the lights sparked back on and bathed the room with light. Harriet and I looked at each other, our cheeks wet with tears. In the midst of great darkness, these beautiful, wonderful Saints had filled this Church building and our souls with light. It was a profoundly moving moment for us—one Harriet and I will never forget. Come to the Light. Yes, from time to time our lives may seem to be touched by, or even wrapped in, darkness. Sometimes the night that surrounds us will appear oppressive, disheartening, and frightening. My heart grieves for the many sorrows some of you face, for the painful loneliness and wearisome fears you may be experiencing. Nevertheless, I bear witness that our living hope is in Christ Jesus! He is the true, pure, and powerful entrance to divine enlightenment. I testify that with Christ, darkness cannot succeed. Darkness will not gain victory over the light of Christ. I bear witness that darkness cannot stand before the brilliant light of the Son of the living God! I invite each of you to open your heart to Him. Seek Him through study and prayer. Learn of Him and of His gospel, participate actively, help each other, and joyfully serve our God. Brothers and sisters, even after the darkest night, the Savior of the world will lead you to a gradual, sweet, and bright dawn that will assuredly rise within you.

Chapter 2 : Singing in the dark: Reflections on John Updike | The Christian Century

Singing in the Dark is a black-and-white motion picture about a Holocaust survivor suffering from total amnesia who comes to the United States.

This evening is an embarrassment of riches if you are still longing for Christmas light. We celebrate Candlemas, blessing the candles that will light our way through this year. No matter how dark these days, we dare not forget Christ is our light. We also celebrate the Presentation of Our Lord, recalling how Mary came out of the seclusion of childbirth and, with her husband Joseph, brought their precious little Jesus to the Temple in Jerusalem as scripture mandated. And, yes indeed, today is even Groundhog Day. While it may seem a frivolous festival observed by furry Phil and his Punxsutawney pals, it is, in fact, more than that: Old Simeon and feeble Anna watched and waited at the Temple for years and years just to answer that very question: Watch as he lifts Jesus to the heavens; be enchanted by his raspy yet riveting voice singing one of the most enthralling hymns the world has ever heard: Lord, now let your servant go in peace, according to your word: My own eyes have seen the salvation, which you have prepared in the sight of every people; A light to reveal you to the nations and the glory of your people Israel. Simeon could now calmly close his eyes one final time for he had beheld the light that would guide his path through death to life forever. At the conclusion of funerals, we open our clenched fists and let our loved ones soar to heaven as if letting a caged bird fly free. We are reminded that every night, as we close our eyes, we die a little death, and yet we trust that when we finally die, we can do so in peace as did Simeon and Anna. Tiny children sense this little death as monsters lurk beneath their beds. They pray the simplest and yet sincerest of prayers: As we grow older, the darkness is no less terrifying. We watch the evening news, horrified at what might come while we sleep. Monsters lurk this time out in the world we love. These were her final moments this side of the kingdom-come. Elsa Mae was the ninety-eight-year-old daughter of African American slaves. Her daughter and I held vigil in the wee hours as Elsa Mae readied herself for the final journey to the far side of the Jordan. We watched as the light faded in her cataracted eyes, as the memories scampered through her withered mind, and then we heard her begin to feebly and softly sing, not indignantly, but exquisitely: We gather here tonight to praise God for a similar blessing of the light. In a matter of moments, you will receive a bit of bread and a sip of wine. Somehow, somehow, this is the very body and blood of that tiny Christ Child for whom you have waited.

The earth starts to come alive after the cold winter months. The flowers come out, the birds sing more than at any other time of the year, and the days get longer. At our house, there is a group of magpies that currently have nothing better to do than sing and cause trouble. It has become a contest to see who can be awake the earliest – me, to hide the food, or them, to eat it! They sing grateful songs even though I usually get to the food before they do. Grateful Songs in the Dark Many birds sing while it is dark. They sing praises to their Creator before it is light enough to get up and go about their daily business. They are awake with nothing to do, so they offer up grateful songs for the way He sustains their lives. They know the darkness is temporary so they use that time to tell the Lord that they love Him. They were created to praise Him. Singing in the dark is an age-old response, not just in a literal way to the rhythms of nature, but in a metaphorical sense when there is trouble. Paul and Silas found themselves in a spot of bother when the authorities took a dim view of their activities. They were beaten, thrown into prison, and had their feet placed in stocks Acts In the darkest part of the darkest night, they were singing and praying. It seems that they were keeping all of the other prisoners awake too – they were listening probably wondering who these crazy men were! The whole prison was awake. Deliverance from the Darkness The darkness is often the most intense right before deliverance. And it was so in this case. A great earthquake shook the prison and released all the prisoners from their chains. It must have been a fearful experience. As a result of the dramatic events of that night, the jailer and his family accepted the gospel. What happens when we find ourselves in dark places? Do we praise God anyway? Or do we feel sad or sorry for ourselves and bemoan our fate? Do we have faith that one day the darkness will end? In our individual experiences and as members of the body of Christ, we are waiting for the time that the darkness will end. We can acknowledge His presence in the darkness with us and look forward to the time that it is over. Often the most intimate times we have with our Lord is when the darkness is at its thickest around us. Darkness is a reason to sing grateful songs and praise Him.

This summer has been one of so much change and growth for me, and my opinions on just about everything are shifting. Some of them are certainly cliched Opportunities are not going to fall into your lap without you persuing them. You have to rise and meet things Just look at it from your own point of view The more you love, the more you are capable of loving. No one is going to be reached by judgment and condemnation Love is truly a beautiful thing, it can be found everywhere if you keep your eyes open, and it is something we all need. Things never stop changing, and while plans are good to have, you just have to accept that they are probably going to change once or twice or ten or twenty A life ruled by fear is a miserable thing. Even if facing your fears is absolutely terrifying, it does get easier and you will have more regrets about not trying than you ever would have if you just remained in your safety zone. Just because people are different from you maybe they dress differently, attend a different church, have a different means of education does not mean they are terrible people. I really believe that it is so, so important to view everyone as an individual person and not just judge them and cram them into categories. God made the world and everyone in it, and He loves each and every one of them more than we could imagine. Loving our neighbor does not mean judging our neighbor It was such a unique show College had been extremely up in the air for basically forever, but to make a very long story short, I was accepted and given a very, very good financial aid offer at the university in town! Classes start September You may have noticed, I sort of overhauled my blog. I was actually toying with the idea of starting a completely new one, but I decided against it for a variety of reasons
