She says online self-service tools are helpful and often safe for basics such as general contracts, service agreements and nondisclosure agreements. You can also save money by completing some forms directly on government websites, such as reserving a business name or obtaining a tax ID, Bayer says. Be sure to check with the providers for the most up-to-date product pricing. LegalShield

Type of service: Flat monthly fee for personal help How it works: Starting a business comes with many risks, and even seemingly straightforward documents often require interpretation by an attorney, says James B. LegalShield essentially crowdsources costs faced by business owners to make legal services more affordable, Rosseau says. LegalShield partners with law firms in every state. Lawyers average 20 years in practice. Individuals and small businesses sign up for monthly, flat-fee plans that include unlimited legal consultations, plus some calls, letters and documents. The two top tiers include trial defense services. LegalShield offers support through the life of a business. This can mean developing HR policies, reviewing vendor contracts or drafting a letter to late-paying clients. LegalZoom

Type of service: Pay per document for self service, or flat monthly fee for personal help How it works: LegalZoom has a slew of do-it-yourself legal documents for small businesses. Complete a questionnaire for documents to form your business entity. Use a similar process to trademark a business name, among other tasks. The company also has a library of legal documents you can download and customize. Commonly used forms include nondisclosure agreements, partner dissolution agreements and cease-and-desist letters. Small businesses can also pay a flat monthly fee for legal assistance with local lawyers when needed. Annually, this can cost less than an hour or two with a traditional lawyer, Rampenthal says. Nolo

Type of service: Pay per document for self service How it works: Nolo is best known for its directory of lawyers and a plethora of free legal information. The service offers thousands of legal forms and online documents, as well as tools for business formation. Nolo has a huge section of customizable business operation documents, such as contracts for working with independent contractors and breach of contract notices. Rocket Lawyer

Type of service: Pay per document for self service, or a flat monthly fee including some personal legal help How it works: Because of pre-negotiated rates with lawyers, Rocket Lawyer says it can save you thousands of dollars on legal representation. The company has a library of business documents. A monthly payment gets you access to unlimited revisions and copies of one form. Small businesses can pay a flat fee for one-off legal processes, such as incorporating or starting an LLC. Some documents include a consultation with an expert; if you register a trademark, for example, a consultation with a trademark attorney is included. A Rocket Lawyer membership includes unlimited copies and revisions to all documents from the legal library. UpCounsel

Type of service: Online marketplace How it works: UpCounsel connects individuals and businesses with hundreds of on-demand lawyers. Bids are flat fees for single projects or hourly rates for ongoing needs. UpCounsel helps manage the relationship with free document storage, esignatures and communication records. Lacking the overhead of a big firm and able to work virtually, they charge comparatively reasonable rates. Faustman says many small businesses use UpCounsel to set up business entities and tackle commercial contracts. UpCounsel lawyers also commonly help with intellectual property, such as securing patents or trademarks, plus tax and employment law issues. Email this Article Print This Article A contract dispute, a lawsuit from a customer, an employee filing an ADA complaint – these are a few of the legal issues you could face as a small business owner. Then there are the more routine matters, like forming a new LLC or putting together a commercial lease. One way or another there will be times when you need legal help. Of course a lawyer can be expensive. Fortunately there are a number of places where you can get free legal forms and information, and even free legal advice for business. Twenty of these resources are listed below. But a word of caution is in order. Sometimes information and advice can be too general to be applicable to your specific situation. Also, you might misunderstand what you read online, or worse, it could be inaccurate. It is cheaper to have an attorney review your legal work than to have him prepare everything for you or fix a mess you make, so combining inexpensive do-it-yourself resources with a legal review is a way to keep your costs down and keep you safe. You can make one document for free to start, which you can print or download as a PDF. After that you can sign up for a Rocket Lawyer membership free for a week. That lets you create unlimited legal documents and comes with advanced tools like their e-signature service and online sharing. You can also ask a lawyer legal questions and have your completed documents reviewed. If you need additional legal help you can get it at a discount. Those eventually included business related topics ranging from forming a corporation to patenting inventions. If you open a free account first, you can create, save and edit your legal form before you pay to download or print it. There are many places where you can get the forms to do it yourself for less. The advantage that LegalZoom offers is the help of an attorney, who will look over your paperwork and suggest changes if necessary. FindLaw In the section on small business law Findlaw has many articles on legal topics that are free to read. Small Business Forums Online discussion forums for small business owners can be full of questionable legal advice, since participants are not attorneys. Then you can run the solution past an attorney to verify that it will work in your case. It provides information on how to report a suspected antitrust violation and whom to turn to for enforcement. There is sufficient information there to either avoid the necessity of hiring an attorney, or to be better prepared when you do hire one. Small Business Administration The SBA website has a page about handling legal concerns that links to some useful resources. It may be more useful to use the search box for articles and advice on specific issues. The IRS maintains a collection of resources here, and some are available in Spanish as well. Department of Justice The Justice Dept. Choose a state and click through to find the ones near you. Civil Rights Division of the Justice Dept. The Civil Rights Division of the Dept. The particular counselor or mentor you get will probably not be a lawyer, but it is possible that he or she will have had some experiences with the same legal issues you face, or can refer you to someone who has. They have more than around the country. You can also search online for their legal guides. Free Business Legal Clinics There are various free legal clinics around the country. Trade Associations If you belong to a trade association you might get free legal advice for business, advice and help from their legal staff. Check a list of trade organizations to find the one that makes the most sense for your small business. Ask around, and to see how they resolved matters. Your Local Attorneys Finally, there are probably some lawyers near you who offer a free initial consultation of 30 minutes or more. Prepare for your initial consultation thoroughly, so you can get to the point quickly and get as much out of the meeting as possible. Gavel Photo via Shutterstock.
