Share Luciana , the current Girl of the Year. Girls of the Year, also known colloquially as Limited Edition dolls, are dolls that were originally only available for one year before retirement. Girls of the Year were introduced in with Lindsey Bergman. Contents [show] Traits of the Girls of the Year and collections Girls of the Year are always modern-day characters that originally were about ten years old in modern-day America during the year of her release. This creates an overarching theme for the year which is expanded in the collection. While the line started modestly, Girls of the Year now have sizable collections including multiple outfits and often one large "fancy" item. Originally the largest item was furniture such as a bed, but nowadays varies into things such as rainforest style huts , bakeries , or faux space habitats , that generally have multiple accessories. Starting with Lea, characters began to be available through other retailers; packaging was initially adjusted to accommodate this and secure product for other retailers. The doll slides out connected to a colorful cardboard backing; her first book, instead of laying on top of her, is tucked behind her. Outfits are packed in clear front boxes with contrasting thread to secure items; accessory sets are packaged in closed boxes and sealed shut, and all items are shown on a front image. However, this packaging was panned by consumers and, other than being used for Contemporary Characters , packaging has reverted to the clear-window style doll box and solid boxes for outfits. In at the release of McKenna Brooks --older character pages began to be removed from the site. In Lindsey, Kailey, and Marisol were temporarily removed from the Girl of the Year Archives and no longer seen on the site; they were later restored. No characters further back than ten years are on the main Girl of the Year site [1] ; the oldest is removed soon after the release of the next character. The books are targeted to ages eight and up. Originally books were smaller at only about five or six chapters and a little longer length than a Historical Character central story ; they later expanded to roughly ten short chapters each. With the release of Grace Thomas, books no longer had illustrations much like BeForever books and consist of about thirteen to fifteen chapters, telling a longer and more involved story. Starting with Nicki Fleming , Girls of the Year started to receive multiple books. The first book is bundled with the doll and any additional books are available separately. The books expand the story and allows for a more rounded image of the character through the year. The books are all written in first person narrative from the viewpoint of the main character. Originally, American Girl kept stock of all prior books. Starting with the release of McKenna Brooks , American Girl began to phase out older books when the books Lindsey , Kailey , Marisol , and Jess were retired from direct sale. Books then started to be phased out or placed on sale for clearance after approximately three to five years after initial release. Staring in , Scholastic took over publishing the main books for all Girls of the Year and the new Contemporary Characters. Movies are available on Blu-Ray and DVD formats [6] and were originally also broadcast--frequently on NBC--with commercial interruptions after the home release. Gabriela did not receive a movie and it is unsure if any other characters will receive movies, as it appears full length movies are being phased out for new media distribution such as shorter Amazon Prime Specials. Nicki was a Real Girl contest to promote girls who were helping in service ways. Mia was Real Girl of girls who performed in inspiring ways. Chrissa was part of an anti-bullying campaign and American Girl partnered with the Ophelia Project. With Kanani, American Girl partnered again with the National Wildlife Federation to raise awareness of endangered animals and promote wildlife preservation as part of the Shine On Now campaign. A "starter collection" of the doll with some of her beginning outfits and a few accessories came bundled at a discount. Saige and Isabelle received white t-shirts with their personal name and matched logos. With Grace and Lea, the items related to the characters personally and came in unique envelopes. Duffle Bag Saige Copland: Decorated Logo T-shirt Isabelle Palmer: Decorated Logo T-shirt Grace Thomas: Red Chef Apron Lea Clark: Boombox Notebook Luciana Vega: Decorated Logo T-shirt Later in the year, near the summer or early fall, a second set of items is released. From Nicki to Lea, all large items are released at launch [14] and the second fall release is generally a single additional outfit and a related accessory set. Chrissa was not given a whole world set which was assumed to be because of her companion dolls. Lanie was also denied a Whole World Collection. Kanani received a Whole World collection, but no character since she has received Whole World Collections; this is likely due to both larger items in collections and the general phasing out of the Whole World option. All items in the collection originally remained available through about November or December, though larger items may begin to sell out in October. The entire collection, regardless of any remaining stock, was officially retired after December 31st and no longer made available to purchase. The character is also listed on the American Girl Archives. The first break from this after Kailey was Gabriela, who will remain available partially into ; this is also true for Luciana. For a while post retirement, books and other media, such as movies, remain available from American Girl for purchase. While quite a few dolls and their lines or items sold out before the end of the year--the new doll and collection is not released for purchase until January 1st of the new year. Sometimes outfits and items are rereleased for the My American Girl line in sales post retirement, but may be modified or be missing components; these generally sell quickly. McKenna, Saige, Isabelle, Grace, Lea and Luciana have had sets that include friends or family mentioned in their stories. Company Overemphasis With the focus by American Girl on the Girl of the Year Line--particularly the original emphasis that she and her items are only available for one year--other lines, such as the Historical Characters Line, suffered in lack of focus. Many American Girl Place locations give larger or more dominant display space to the Girl of the Year, emphasize the character more prominently barring any other product launches or changes , and items and meals in bistros generally focus on the character. With BeForever , this has been less of a concern but is still brought up frequently. There were no fully Latina-identifying characters released for several years after Marisol; Lea is marked as one-eighth Brazilian through heritage, but does not personally identify as Latina and in the movie was played by a white actress. Not all cultures have been represented fairly. For example, no East Asian or South Polynesian characters that have not been white biracial and no Native American characters have ever been released in the line. Critiques to the company about a lack of diversity in the Girls of the Year Line have frequently been dismissed, often with customer service suggestions that consumers may look towards the BeForever or Truly Me lines available for diversity in purchasing items. However, these problems are specifically with the Girls of the Year line, which receive the large foci and launches on the first of a new year and are given full books and modern-day collections. Theme Repetition The line has seen a frequent repetition of themes. Of the sixteen main characters, three--Marisol, Isabelle, and Gabriela--have all had themes of ballet dance and each one was given ballet or dance outfits even though both Marisol and Gabriela only had ballet-style dance as minimal plots in the stories. Most collections focus in part on pets and animals, traditionally feminine activities, or non-science pursuits. Luciana is being touted, however, as a STEM character; her collection shows deep emphasis on space exploration, astronomy, and aspects of engineering. This was especially prominent if items or dolls had retired early in December before the bulk of the holiday purchasing season; for example, Nicki and Mia dolls sold out very early in December This may be being addressed with Gabriela being available partially into ; it is currently unknown if this will be carried forward for characters after her. Gabriela and Tenney It is heavily theorized that Gabriela McBride was a last minute shift by the company into being the Girl of the Year. She was the first Girl of the Year in several years to not receive a movie, no large items were initially available at launch like had been done since Nicki, and later her "unique" earrings were made available for Tenney Grant when piercing a doll. It has been suspected--though it will likely never be confirmed by the company--that Tenney Grant was intended to be the Girl of the Year, but she was instead used to launch the contemporary character line after the last minute change. List of Girl of the Year Characters Lindsey Bergman was released in and lasted a little over a year and a half. Kailey Hopkins was released in and also lasted a little over a year and a half.
