Lemonade season is upon us. Every summer, thousands of kids across the nation spend their days running lemonade stands. This year, May 1 marked the official kickoff to the season with , kids participating in National Lemonade Day , an event created by entrepreneur and philanthropist Michael Holthouse to teach kids about running a business. Lemonade stands in America are the quintessential first business, and many successful entrepreneurs will tell you they got their start by peddling lemonade on the street corner when they were kids. Holthouse, who founded the nonprofit Prepared 4 Life to help kids acquire important life skills, believes that all the skills essential to entrepreneurship can be learned through the process of starting a lemonade stand. Here are five things you need to know. Start by setting goals. Setting goals is the first step to any successful endeavor. Ask yourself, What do I want to achieve by starting a lemonade stand? Your goal could be to buy something with the money you make or to raise money for a cause. Whether your goal involves making money, decorating a cool stand or all of the above, make sure that every decision you make is helping you achieve those goals. Create a vision for your lemonade stand that will make it different and stand out. Think about what makes you unique among your group of friends and express your personality in the way you decorate your stand. How can you incorporate aspects of yourself -- like your favorite sports, games or music -- to attract customers to your lemonade stand? Give your lemonade stand as unique a personality as your own! Connect with your product. You have lots of choices for the type of lemonade you want to serve, so take some time to think about your product. Maybe your family has a special lemonade recipe you want to use, or you have a favorite brand of lemonade that you always drink. You can start promoting your business even before you set up shop. Plan a campaign to let people in your community know when and where they can find your lemonade stand. Include an offer to give a discount to those who bring their fliers to your stand. Once your stand is open for business, make sure it has plenty of things -- balloons, big signs, decorative items -- that will help people notice your stand from a distance. Creating a clever name for your stand is also a great way to promote your business. Be a great salesperson. But most important, remember the key to selling a lot of lemonade is in creating a valuable customer experience. Remember to smile, greet your customers and make them feel special. Always be appreciative when they buy your lemonade.
