Location 7 Lovely host who gave us his number so we could contact if we needed anything. Spacious, more like an apartment than a hotel room. Kitchen was a nice change although dishes could have used a thorough clean. Heater was very appreciated, as were the great restaurant recommendations. Patrick, Australia The owners were friendly, generous and helpful, with good advice on what to see locally, and avoiding inflated prices. Unfortunately too late Rooms and facilities were great. Stephen, Australia Stayed in a lovely 4-man room, with own kitchen and even a living room. The host was very welcoming and showed us a trekking trail, along with serving a glass of wine in the evening: Awesome place, exceptional host. Just feel like being home! Hoi, Hong Kong The owner is very helpful and willing to go the extra mile. He communicated with us through whatsapp before we reached and is willinb to fetch us to the old bus stand in the early morning. The location is away from the buzz of the mall road and noises from the main road. Spacious space with 2 bedrooms. Jing, Singapore If you want to take a step back from the touristy aspects of Shimla this is perfect. Great local community feel with local points of interest and small shops. Deven is a real star and nothing is too much trouble. He organised a fantastic deal for a car and driver for a four day trip to Kalpa for us. The accommodation is spacious, safe and charming. All in all could hardly be improved upon. Extremely highly recommended Chris, United Kingdom It is more like home stay and you feel very welcome and like you come back to home. The host make all your wishes come true. Close to the bus station. Irina, Australia Close enough to Shila to be convenient, a 15 minute downhill walk, far enough away to enjoy a peaceful nights sleep. Father, and son Deven speak perfect english, are friendly and have all the information you need to make the best of your time here.

But then the everlasting battle between rational Tiny and irrational, insecure, emotional Tiny started up again. People really like audio books. Did you just invent the wheel all over again? Rational Tiny rarely wins those discussions. But the idea kept coming back. So here we go. Be advised that, if you have a hard time reading or hearing about animal abuse, this story might not be for you. These stories are hard to write, and it was hard for me to read as well. They are my way of raising awareness and fighting the injustice that these animals need to suffer. I instantly loved the people who frequented it. Turns out they all loved animals, too. How could I not love them? The day my first story post paid out, I started working on a new draft. A story about dogs. I knew Rhonda ran an animal rescue and that animal abuse was a subject that lay close to her heart. I feel the same way, myself. I wanted to write something that would be a tribute to Rhonda and the work she dedicated herself to. I wanted to raise awareness about these issues. The pen is mightier than the sword and all that. I cranked the story out in a day and thinkzombie and bex-dk helped me edit and polish it. Hugs Tiny If you would like to read more of my stories, feel free to have a look around on my SteemShelf. Every story I have written so far has found a home there. I consider myself lucky to have found this amazing community. Would you love to be a part of a community that can help you learn and improve your writing skill? Our door is always open for kindred spirits. Chapter 3 : Hotel Somewhere Over The Rainbow, Shimla, India - calendrierdelascience.com

The song "Over the Rainbow" almost didn't make into the final movie version of 'The Wizard of Oz.' Walter Frisch, a professor of music, traces the history of the classic song in his latest book "Arlen and Harburg's Over the Rainbow."

Before I share the extract with you here is a little bit about the book. Single mum Jess has had her world turned upside down. Jess has got a tough life back on track after love-of-her-life husband Simon walked out on her and their beautiful young daughters Katy and Abi. But she has long-time friend and confidante Polly to turn to—until Polly and Simon start having an affair together. Jess can no longer trust anyone—including herself. Then out of the blue she is mysteriously sent a clipping for a temporary post in the Ministry of Education in Ghana, where she did a gap year as a teenager, and where she was happy. She is on the brink of losing everything at home but could this be a lifeline? Oh god, Jess, can you ever forgive me? She watched the tears coursing down the pale face before her, fair fringe plastered to her brow, eyes red and bulging, hands threaded through the straps of the hobo bag and clasped together at her chest. A study in tension and grief. What could she say? Could she ever forgive? All that had happened flooded back into her mind, events and emotions she had fought off for years and thought that they were past and that she was over it all. She touched the door lintel to try to steady herself. Where was the attractive stylish blonde, the confident self-assured woman she had known as her best friend, before—before? Yet Jess noted the expensive designer jeans she wore and the draped silky top. Yet this was someone with whom she had shared so much, university, work, marriage, having children. Simon, who had been her soul mate— Chapter Two: Ghosts Jess slept fitfully that night, her mind in turmoil. So Polly had left Simon; he was unfaithful to her too. And now she had decided to return to Matt and the bosom of her family, her boys. The boys she had deserted. Did she even know she must do! Now it had started up again, that insecurity, that confusion, those ghosts of the past. Just like in Ghana all those years ago. She had no idea what was about to happen to them, to her much-loved family, but somehow it reminded her so vividly of that time in Ghana, and those portentous drumbeats—they were haunting her again, whatever they meant—the whispering souls and spirits calling to her across the bush; the surging and dying of the wind on the night air, the insistent beat of the kpanlogo djembe. Once more, her dreams were garish and crowded as they had been there. And she remembered that haunting. What was it that felt so ominous now? Eventually, exhausted, she had slept, but it was restless and in the morning she had struggled out of bed feeling as though she had the worst hangover ever. Simon was already up and she could hear him downstairs as she went for her shower. Are you both up? Her eyes looked puffy and sore. Paint a decent face on— As she swept brown eyeliner across her eyes, she became aware that he was standing in the bedroom doorway, a sense of agitation emanating from him. She could almost smell the sweat. She looked up and saw that he was leaning against the lintel staring at her. She knew him so well. He wanted to resign from his job and let her to be the breadwinner? Oh dear— she hoped not. But he had threatened that so many times. She raised her eyebrows enquiringly. He shifted from foot to foot in the doorway and Jess began to feel very uneasy. Her hand trembled and she dripped the liquid eyeliner onto the dressing table. Her heart fell, tumbling to inexorable death. What on earth do you mean?
