Although it is now one of the very largest modern metropolises in the world, its downtown area is enclosed by historic walls that were originally built over years ago and contains a number of valuable historical heritage including Royal Palaces, fortress gates, and old residential districts. Gyeongbokgung Palace Gyeongbokgung Palace. The main Royal Palace of Joseon located at the heart of Seoul Dancheong is a traditional method of decorating various palace and temple buildings with intricate patterns of the five cardinal colors, blue symbolizing the east , white west , red south , black north and yellow center. This type of painting also serves to protect wooden structures from the elements. Located at the foot of Bugaksan, the main mountain overlooking downtown Seoul, Gyeongbokgung was the principal Royal Palace for about years from its construction in , just three years after the foundation of the Joseon Dynasty , until it was burnt down just after the commencement of the Japanese invasion of Korea in . Thereafter it remained in ruins for years until when it was restored; but, less than fifty years later, it fell into the hands of Japanese colonialists who destroyed the front part of the palace to build the Japanese Government-General Building on the site. The latter building, a neo-classical structure, continued to be used to house government offices even after Korea was liberated in until it was demolished in as part of an effort to remove the remaining vestiges of the colonial period. Some of the ruins of the building were moved to the Independence Hall of Korea in Cheonan, Korea for public display. Under a major renovation project to restore the palace starting in , some of its buildings were restored and its main gate, Gwanghwamun, was moved to its original location. A view of the rear garden of Changdeokgung Palace, including Buyongjeong and Juhamnu Pavilions, with Buyongji Pond situated between them The rear garden of Changdeokgung Palace, one of the Royal Palaces of Joseon still standing in Seoul, has been widely praised for the harmony between exquisite architectural structures and its natural surroundings, and is now one of the most popular tourist attractions in Seoul. It features a pond and several exquisite pavilions that were built around it over a long period of time. The garden was open to the general public until the mids, but this caused severe damage which led to its closure for several years to restore it to its original condition. Only a part of the garden was reopened to the public in May , but at present visitors need to make reservations in order to visit. Geummamun Gate at the Changdeokgung Palace Garden in Jongno, Seoul Deoksugung Palace To most Korean people today Deoksugung Palace is largely connected with the desperate struggle of the Joseon Dynasty to survive amid the incursions of the major imperial powers at the turn of the 19th century. It was in that King Gojong proclaimed the launch of the Korean Empire and designated Deoksugung as the imperial palace after leaving the Russian legation where he had taken refuge one year earlier in a desperate attempt to keep his government free from the interference of Imperial Japan. Unlike other Royal Palaces of Joseon, Deoksugung contains both Western style stone buildings and traditional wooden structures. With the proclamation of the Korean Empire the palace began to draw attention from foreign diplomats working in the legations of the United States, Russia, Great Britain and France located around it. The promenade along the southern wall of the palace has been particularly popular among young people seeking romantic ambiance. It is the largest of the old fortress gates still standing in Korea today, and was designated as the National Treasure No. The pavilionstyle wooden building forming the upper part of the gate was severely damaged by arson in February , but it was returned to its original form after a full-scale restoration project that took five years to complete. The gate is often associated with the large complex of shopping facilities formed around it, including a traditional market which has steadily grown into a major tourist attraction. The area is always bustling with Korean and international shoppers seeking to purchase clothes, kitchen wares, domestic appliances and other commodities offered at reasonably low prices despite their good quality. Many of the shops doing business in the area run their own factories to maintain competitive pricing of the products they deal in. The Namdaemun Market currently houses over 9, stores and attracts over , shoppers a day. It has formed a huge international trading network of Korean merchants scattered around the world, spending and earning a large amount of money through imports and exports. Heunginjimun Gate Seoul, the capital of the Joseon Dynasty, was protected by a long stone wall with eight gates, two of which, Sungnyemun Namdaemun or South Gate and Heunginjimun Dongdaemun or East Gate, can still be seen today. Heunginjimun Gate Dongdaemun - East Gate Situated on the eastern part of the old fortified wall of Seoul, Heunginjimun Gate of Rising Benevolence attracts tens of thousands of people from across Korea and neighboring countries due both to its historic significance and its proximity to several large markets that have formed around it, including Gwangjang Market, Pyeonghwa Market, Sinpyeonghwa Market and Dongdaemun Market. All of these markets are particularly famous for the diverse fashion items they offer, clothes and accessories in particular. Compared with department stores that usually sell higher-priced luxury products, these markets have numerous wholesalers who supply competitively-priced good-quality products to retailers across Korea. Gwanghwamun Plaza The 163m-long and 34m-wide Gwanghwamun Plaza is a large square located in the middle of the road between Gwanghwamun Gate and Sejongro Junction. In hopes to return the heart of the year-old historic city of Seoul to its citizens, the Seoul Metropolitan Government transformed what used to be a roadway into a plaza and opened it to the public in 2011. Major media companies and hotels are located nearby.

When Beirite China got the news, he walked out of the tent and onto the high platform. The 4th division was made up of light cavalry and infantry, with the main force being infantry. There was only one light armored infantry regiment protecting the left wing. The right wing was the city protection regiment. The center was the biggest and formed up of sword shield soldiers, spearmen, and archers in that order. The huge army charged forwards in an orderly formation, shocking the heavens. He was originally a hot blooded person and being cooped up for so many days made him feel uncomfortable. Seeing the enemy troops come out, his blood boiled. The grassland cavalry were well trained and in a short time, they formed up. Beirite China rode his Qingfu Horse and walked to the front of the army, waving them forward to attack. The cavalry started charging fearlessly towards the enemy. Before they even reached the front, the 4th division archers gave them a warning. After the 4th division was re-equipped, the bows that they used were all elite equipment produced by the bow and crossbow division, be in range or precision they were all of high grade. The arrow rain that covered the sky was like a huge net that rained down on their heads. The grassland cavalry had misjudged the range of the archers. All of a sudden, both humans and horses fell to the ground. The vanguard forces of the grassland cavalry were like wheat getting harvested as one by one. They were killed in the arrow rain. The powerful arrow rain made the grassland cavalry cower in fear. He was a rash person and the blood on the battlefield ignited the blood in his heart. He decided to risk it all and give it their all to continue their charge toward the enemy. The short meters was destined to becoming a killing field. Finally, after paying heavy casualties, the grassland cavalry bumped into the sword shield soldiers and spearmen of the 4th division. The high speed cavalry had a destructive effect on them. One could see that the middle army was about to be broken right through. At the crucial moment, the light cavalry at the sides cut in. With the help of the light armored cavalry, the attack of the grassland cavalry was affected and their attacking momentum was messed up. Making use of this chance, the center group, under the lead of Mu Guiying, formed up once again to prevent the cavalry from charging through. The grassland cavalry was strong as expected. They had, under the situation of being under armored and outnumbered, been able to deal so much damage. They were really worthy to be called the grassland iron cavalry. Just as the situation entered a stalemate, a huge rumbling spread out from the back. The deafening sound was even louder than the charge of the grassland cavalry. Beirite China was astonished. He turned around to see. Instantly, he was on the verge of giving up. Before his army was a huge force of cavalry charging forwards. They wore shiny armor; under the sunlight, they reflected a golden shine. The 2nd division had arrived at this crucial moment. Before the grassland cavalry could even react, the 2nd division had already rushed to the front. Together with the 4th division, they totally surrounded the grassland army. What happened next was a total slaughter! In this battle, apart from the who surrendered, the remaining ones all died. Their commander, one of the three generals of the Tianqi tribe, had also died. The sun hung overhead and shone down, revealing a beautiful red glow. The death of Beirite China was a turning point to the grassland tribes. It signified that the grassland tribe rule of the middle region was over and the time of Shanhai City had arrived. In the later parts, the various grassland tribes named the place where Beirite China died as the origin of blood. Time after time, some grassland herders would come over and mourn and remember the glory of their past. His death was the turning point of the Battle of Lianzhou. After the battle, the prisoners were sent back by the city protection regiment to Mulan City. Along with the prisoners was the head of Beirite China, which would be teleported back to Shanhai City. As the main force of this battle, the 2nd and 4th divisions would directly continue on in the battle. They would follow the orders of the commander unit and continue fighting. The 2nd division went east, and their target was the empty Broken Blade County. They aimed to totally destroy the Broken Blade County city protection division to help out with Gushan County. As for the 4th division, they came down south towards the base of Tianqi Tribe. The two divisions were like two assassins, under the planning of the commander unit, they aimed to take out the heads
