Vanilla Lightning is a young pegasus who finds out about a conspiracy against Equestria.. Now she relies on the other children to try to save her kingdom from an army of Changelings. A Sweet Day On an island north of Equestria was a kingdom different from any other ever seen. Sweet Island was all made of candy and was home to a rare breed of ponies that never grew, but they were the fast ponies across Equestria, said that because of the high rate of sugar on their blood. The kingdom was also where was the Candy Flight Academy, the largest flight school in Equestria. This kingdom was ruled by a wise and good king, King Candy. Something that no one but the king knew, was that the kingdom of Sweet Island was supported by a powerful ancient magic. Not even the king knew the origin of this spell, stored in a special room of the castle, the only tree of Rainbow Candies. The legends about the tree varied greatly, some of the most common suggested that the seeds from which originated the tree had been blessed by the princesses of Equestria, Celestia and Luna, bolder legends suggest an even more ancient magic and the craziest suggested until tree had been created by the gods who created Equestria. King Candy had a daughter, the little Vanilla Lightning a teal Candy Pegasus, with black, candy-coated mane. Her dream was to join the Flight Academy and become a racer, but her father forbade her. Why others can but not I? King Candy sighed, staring at her daughter sadly. It all began after the event, she had won the first place for the second time in that kind of competition we were all very proud, but had a very unhappy person. I tried to convince her not to go, but she managed to convince myself that it was nothing more than a friendly race. From his Part of it was really that, a friendly race, just to dispute a place to which he insisted be entitled. A race for their honor. But they were caught by a storm on the way. Dusky Spark returned after three days, with a broken wing. Meanwhile we look for any sign of where your mother could be, but only found her two days after, she was badly injured. She told us that she had herself thrown in a city that was under attack by a group of changelings. Regarding Dusky Spark, I never saw him after that, at least until he came to the Academy last year. Knowing that her mother had died was one thing, but she had never imagined anything like this. Second, she realized how much her father was only trying to protect her and how much she had been wrong at times when she had been angry with him because of it and even start training hidden. I promise to be a good girl from now on. I want to compensate you with something special. Dusky Spark landed on the finish line after a while. His gaze fell upon the castle window, where he saw the silhouettes of the king and the princess talking. He rolled his eyes and shook his head, then threw a quick look at the Candy Ponies still talking at the finish line. Dusky sighed somewhat angry and walked away, always looking to see if the three were still there. He had no time to waste on those brats, much less patience for it. Sometime that would change, and when that time finally come, they would regret all that, specially Strawberry. No one comes down here, right? A single rainbow candy in the wrong hooves can be a disaster. Vanilla thought she heard something and looked back frightened, she thought she saw a shadow, but it was only for a split second, it was likely that it was just her imagination. Yet she still thought about saying something to her father. Looked at him and the door now opened, changed her mind. It was just that dark and scary place that was messing with her. I thought that plants, even the candy ones, needed sunshine. In the center of the cave was the Rainbow Tree. The tree trunk was a striped red and white, like the trees in Candy Cane Forest, but it was thicker like the trees in Laffy Taffy Forest, had gelatin leafs that shinny of all colors in the light of the crystal, forming rainbows of light throughout the cave. The Rainbow Candies were nothing more than marshmallows with the colors of the rainbow and had very few on the tree, besides being difficult to notice them amid so much color and thick foliage. But what we came for? He gently placed the box on the floor and opened it, revealing a silver necklace with a heart-shaped ruby. Vanilla approached suspect and touched the necklace with a hoof and stepped back, nothing happened. She lowered her head and touched it with her nose, still nothing, but she noticed something suspicious. I bought this to your mother in Canterlot before her first race. She said it was her lucky necklace. You never let me down. She was sure she heard something like laughter coming from the tunnel, but she had been wrong once, it was probably just her imagination. She definitely had to stop it, especially now that would have to focus more on her flying skills. That was the beginning of a wonderful new phase. So why something told her it was just a dream?

Chapter 2 : Nine Tales Of Equestria - Fimfiction

Legends of Equestria is a massively multiplayer online role-playing game which takes place in the mystical realm of Equestria.

Share Vanhoover is a location in Tales of Equestria, located over the steep, treacherous mountainsides right next to Ponyvale. There has been talk of a tunnel being built through the mountain, but as of now, the only way into Vanhoover from Ponyvale is up and over. Vanhoover is a successful mining town, boasting large beautiful stone buildings made of the same stone mined everyday. Much of their fortune has come from the mines, and has funded their lavish Clocktower and beautiful buildings. In the spring and summertime, their breezy valley is one of the prittiest places in Equestria. Contents [ show ] About Vanhoover The town of Vanhoover has grown from very small to quite large in the time since it originally sprang up, the population growing exponentially from immigration. The original draw of gold had dried up decades ago and the mines that provided them have been closed for ages, but still individuals flock to the mountain town for reasons of their own. The growth of population has put much strain on the resources the town is able to provide, and the construction of public facilities and amenities has been a slow process. Just recently Vanhoover has grown to a population of registered citizens in the thousand range, though not all residents are registered and a great many are simply foreign visitors. With such a high population and little ability to produce food it relies heavily on import, using the considerable wealth accrued during the days of its gold-rush era to fund much of the public works and in maintaining what few roads exist. In recent days the mining system closest to the town has been reopened, with a supply of raw materials exiting from it in a slow but steady trickle thanks to the excavations of the hard-working but mysterious Miners Guild, and the town is looking forwards to a prosperous future. The citizens of Vanhoover bask in the relative safety of the town center and the settled countryside, but for many there is always the knowledge that the bleak wilderness lies on their doorstep. Within only a kilometer of the city center the roads quickly vanish and the trees close in tightly. Within sight of the Clocktower are the frozen mountains and the vast swathes of uncharted wilderness, stretching far into the horizon and out of sight entirely. Vanhoover is a bastion of civilization, but the nearby wilderness makes life here often very strange compared to life in the far south. There are mysteries both wonderful and horrible just barely out of sight or out of reach here in the North, and though most locals enjoy the stability of city life, they know that they stand quite literally on the edge of all civilization as we know it. History of Vanhoover The cold and uncharted North. Deep, silent forests blanketed in white and stretching from one horizon to the next; jagged mountain peaks that reach ever upwards and slash at the clouds like razor teeth; deep, dark lakes of water and streams fed by melting snow, glimmering pure and cold in the sun. The harsh realities of this unforgiving land are a constant obstacle to those who travel through it, hiding mysteries fantastic and terrifying alike in the far reaches of the northern frontier. It seems odd that anypony would want to make their home here, but the reality is that there are those who have been doing that for so long that much of their history is long forgotten and unrecorded. The native tribes who have long lived here in seclusion have only recently faced and interacted with the people of the southern lands, and much of the wilderness is unknown and unmapped, traveled only by the confident and experienced. Here at the edge of the western sea a colony was formed by travelers from across the world, from the magical unicorns to the adventurous pegasi, the stoic earth ponies to fearless griffons. Settlers from every species and every walk of life braved the wild northern lands to make it to the coastal colony, drawn by the lure of gold, adventure, and a new start in new lands. These settlers, brought here over two-hundred years ago, founded the town of Vanhoover at the edge of the northern territories, braving the unknown to stake their claim, and here Vanhoover has remained and grown. With so many settlers from so many lands, so far in the frontier, Vanhoover has long been forced to make its own ends meet; it is a sovereign territory separate from the Kingdom of Equestria to the south and the now reborn Crystal Empire to the east. Though most of the town is widely spread over a large area and many locals are self-sufficient, the territory is watched over by a municipal council and an elected mayor, with the frontier territory itself presided over by the Rangers, ponies and otherwise that protect the wilderness from needless destruction and that protect the town from dangers beyond its borders. Offshoot Species in Vanhoover Batpony An offshoot of the Pegasus species and one that is almost purely nocturnal, differentiated by their leathery bat wings rather than feathered ones and large ears. Batponies are semi-native to this region in that they tend to live in mountains where they can build their homes into solid rock or colonize cavern networks, and a few of the abandoned mine systems from the Goldrush Era have since been claimed by these ponies. Flutterponies An exceptionally rare offshoot breed of ponies that prefers the far-reaching meadows of the south, similar to pegasus ponies in that they have wings and can land on clouds, but differing greatly otherwise. Flutterponies are smaller than other pony breeds and could be mistaken for foals, but their large insect-like wings give them away as something entirely different. Flutterponies practice a kind of magic that heavily relies on their seemingly close connection to nature, but have neither the fast-flying abilities of pegasus ponies, nor the magical skill of unicorns, nor the strength of earth-ponies. Flutterponies very rarely come this far north, and if they do it is often because of pressing need. The single most sacred ritual in goat society is The Dare. Dares are a very serious matter!
