This part of the holiday was the absolute highlight for me. We had left booking the cruise options until the very last minute, as no one could make their minds up about when and where to go. One of the significant disadvantages of travelling with a large group is the need to take multiple peoples annual leave options and interests into consideration! As we had deliberated for so long about where to go and what to do, we were unable to book into our preferred option for the Halong Bay part of the holiday. We had intended to book a private cruise on a traditional Indochine Junk, which sounded divine. Sadly, they were all booked and the next best option that we could find that could accommodate all of us was a 3 day cruise on Au Co 1. We were all a bit unsure about what this experience would be like, none of us are cruise people and the idea of being locked away on a boat with 66 other tourists filled some of us with trepidation. Upon arrival at Tuan Chau Port, where our cruise was to depart from, we were ushered to the waiting area with our fellow travellers, all of us surreptitiously eyeballing each other. All of them dressed in matching colourful Hawaiian shirts. The communal gasp of horror was almost audible. My sister in law and I locked eyes, both of us instantly imagining all sorts of potential raucous debauchery. Shame on all of us though, the cruise was amazing, we loved every second of it. Writing this today, months afterwards, I would still say that it is one of the best things that we have ever done as a family. The Hawaiian shirted louts? Well, they turned out to be a group of Norwegian engineering students that were finishing up a study tour of Asia and were a charming and polite group of young men, who turned out to be great fun to be around. A true lesson in not making assumptions was learnt. The boat was very clean and well equipped. The food was great no one got sick! The crew of the Au Co were fantastic, lots of fun, brilliant with kids and very talented at keeping everyone entertained. There were plenty of different activities available onboard and it is important to note that there was no obligation to take part in any of these. Activities that were offered on our cruise included kayaking tours of Ba Trai Dao area and also Dark and Bright Lagoon. A traditional bamboo boat ride during which we actually saw some Cat Ba Langurs playing. Apparently we were extremely lucky to see these as there are fewer than 60 remaining. Ross and Hamish were able to paddle very close to them in their kayak. In the evenings the boys busied themselves squid fishing off the side of the boat with the crew. Every morning there was a tai chi lesson on the deck, Hamish, my nephew and my Mum all did this together and enjoyed it! There were cooking lessons and fruit carving lessons before dinner. Nick on the top deck of the Au Co 1 Every evening we enjoyed sunset cocktails on the rooftop of the Au Co and marvelled at the wonder surrounding us Activities of note included a visit to Surprise Cave in Lan Ha Bay. The cave was enormous, made up of three separate chambers, all filled with delicate stalactites and stalagmites. We all enjoyed the exercise though and it was well worth the walk to enjoy the magnificent view from the exit of the cave. Our visit to the cave was very early in the morning and the caves were empty as we walked through. I have since heard that it can be chaotically busy later in the day when the day boats visit Halong so that is something to consider when tossing up between an overnight cruise visit to Halong or a day trip. Inside one of the immense chambers of Surprise Cave. The two tiny figures are Hamish and my nephew who ran about inside the cave having the time of their lives. The largest chamber inside Surprise Cave is the last before you exit. The Cave was used by the Vietcong Army as a hide out during the Vietnam War and it was this aspect of the caves that probably fascinated the boys the most as well as the opportunity to have a run around. For the rest of us it was a great opportunity to get some exercise and I would also recommend visiting the caves just to see the view from the caves exit. Well we all cycled to the village and Nick who was training for NSWPSA Cross Country ran the 6km to the village, much to the amusement of everyone else on the cruise and the villagers. He was able to keep pace with us all also, pretty impressive in the heat and humidity! Viet Hai village until recently was completely self sufficient and essentially isolated from the rest of the world only accessible by rough tracks through the jungle. It is home to 80 families and is now open to a small amount of tourism. We were permitted to visit as many of the Au Co Crew grew up in the village and the village is now the primary supplier of vegetables and fruit to the Au Co. We were lucky enough to be given a tour of the sustainable and completely organic garden beds that supplied the majority of the food we were enjoying at every meal! Once again, we were the only tourists to be exploring the village and the whole experience felt like such a privilege. Chatting to the locals who all adored the boys and Hamish and my nephew loved an impromptu soccer game with some of the local boys. The cycle ride to the village itself was beautiful, passing through tropical jungle and fields of grazing animals, there were a few hills but nothing too challenging and all the children managed the ride easily. Soccer truly is the world's number one sport! Hamish playing soccer with the boys of Viet Hai village that was cut off from the rest of the world until relatively recently. Be warned though, the rubbish in the water is appalling. The crew explained to us that most of the rubbish floats down to Halong from China and that almost all the professionally operated cruise ship companies are now sponsoring rubbish collection programs. Even so the amount of rubbish is extraordinary and there is only so much that the cruise ship companies and local people can manage. If any readers are lucky enough to visit Halong Bay and experience the serenity and yet striking beauty of this World Heritage listed site please consider writing to UNESCO and lobbying for the protection of the people whose livelihood depends upon the cleanliness of the water, those that inhabit the floating villages and simply for the protection of the environment. Tips for Halong Bay: The days were beautiful though and the water was lovely and refreshing. Yes we swam despite the rubbish and no one ended up sick or acquired google worthy skin infections!

While explaining the function of the device to the disinterested cook, Carina was overheard by two local thieves, Gan and Jan , who subsequently stole it from her. The deeper ruts indicated that two men had boarded it while it passed. Catching up to the carriage, owned by a couple named George and Margaret , Carina found that Gan and Jan were indeed inside. She demanded the return of the Occhiolino. When the thieves pulled guns, the shots alarmed the horses, causing the carriage to careen out of control. Carina managed to reclaim the Occhiolino, but Jan stole her journal when he and Gan jumped the carriage prior to it running off a bridge. Using that clue, Carina found them in a spice shop discussing what to do with their prize. Carina confronted them a second time to claim her property. While the thieves had lost their pistols, they still had swords. However, the swords flew through the air for Carina to catch them. In the process of their escape, they stepped on and broke the Occhiolino. While sad that the magnifier was ruined, Carina was relieved to have her journal back. Giving the magnets to the girl and reminding her of how science can improve lives, Carina resumed her mission. When the soldier scoffed to know why she, as a woman, would want to find that establishment, Carina made the mistake of telling the truth; that she was a scientist and had been studying the stars her whole life. Immediately branded as a witch, she was forced to flee, spending weeks on the run while evading and getting into skirmishes with the authorities until she was finally captured. Carina was visited by a clerk and while talking she confesses that she managed to trick the lock before she escapes the cell and runs out. Though she disbelieves his story with dealing with the dead, she says he must help her before she frees him and runs after being recognized. Both of them are then chased by British soldiers and go their separate ways for the time being. He accuses her of being a witch which she defends until Jack Sparrow arrives and helped her in eluding the guards though she screams at the pirate for his actions. Carina then runs away but is soon captured by the guards sentenced to execution for her "crimes". Do I have your word? Carina used them to insult the crowd for their stupidity by stating she was astronomer but her speech was cut off by the recently captured Jack Sparrow resulting in an argument which ends with her telling the executioners to kill him first. Carina kicked her executioner off the platform just as Scrum who was fighting a guard arrives nearly knocks the lever to the rope down. After Scrum defeats the guard she thanks him but accidentally releases it. Carina falls through but is caught by Henry who catches her and asks for her aid in his quest, which she reluctantly agrees. John Scarfield tried to shoot Henry so that both of them would die, but they were saved by Jack and Henry freed Carina. With the pirates, Carina fled the area. Making their way to the Dying Gull, Carina criticized the ship which was still ashore but stopped the ship prepared to set sail though they have a hitch, the ship makes its voyage. When the Silent Mary started to pursue them, Carina called the pirates stupid for believing in ghosts and was mad when Jack allowed his crew to lead a mutiny against him. On a rowboat, she is still annoyed and before reaching land Carina decided to save herself and discarded her dress having realized that the men on the other ship were after Jack and dived into the water. Making it ashore, she sees Armando Salazar and his horde of undead soldiers becoming terrified at the sight of ghosts and realizing they were real. At a lost of words of seeing the supernatural, Carina ran into the forest screaming where she was caught in a net. Afterwards, three men arrived and knocked out Jack while taking him and his companions to their leader Pig Kelly. When Jake awoke, he found Carina and Henry tied up as Kelly forced Jack who owed him a large debt to marry his sister Beatrice Kelly as a way to pay it off. However, before the kiss can occur, the wedding is halted by the arrival of Hector Barbossa who dispatches Kelly and his men freeing Carina and her companions. Barbossa then used Sword of Triton to release the Black Pearl from imprisonment in a bottle as Carina watched in awe as the ship grew to its natural size. However, after some time he realized he needed her help so he released her and Henry allowing Carina to take the helm to locate the Black rock island by using the stars as a map. As she guided the ship, Carina listed all the unbelievable things she has witnessed with ghosts and a shrunken ship that grew to natural size, stating there was no scientific explanation that could explain this. As Henry kept lookout, he told her all the myths of the sea were real, jokingly telling her to admit that she was wrong but Carina retorted she merely had doubts. Henry called her out on this apology but she stated he had to apologize for putting her life in danger with said myths as Henry stated they were something she now believed in apologizing for it, she accepted this causing him to realize he walked into her hands and leaves as she stated he saw things her way. Carina continued sailing as Barbossa approached her, he notices that Smyth was carrying the diary of Galileo Galilei, an object that he had once possessed. While discussing its origin with Smyth and how she got it from her father, she slapped him after he mentions the ruby was stolen and her father was a thief. Carina defended her father as a man of science as Barbossa realized that she was named after the star known as Carina and walked off. Arrival on Black Rock Island Edit After arriving on the island, Carina reminded them that they needed to save Henry as Barbossa stated they needed the trident to save Henry. As they transverse the island, Carina remarked to Jack on how beautiful it was as Jack questioned if she meant the rocks but is told that the island was a reflection of the heavens that her father wanted her to find.

Isaacs wears the hook on his right hand, supported by a shoulder harness. Hook is feared and ruthless, but also gentlemanly. Ravello, a circus man in a constantly ragged woollen coat, offers Peter a servant and to ensure his well being in the search for the treasure. Ravello provides a "red coat" and a bad influence that Peter Pan is increasingly in the direction of Captain Hook turns. He sees himself not as a living person, because he only eats eggs and no longer sleeps there. He is revealed in the middle of the book to be the old James Hook, who escaped the crocodile, when the muscle contractions of the stomach meant to crush and digest Hook, which broke the vial of poison Hook kept with him at all times. The poison killed the crocodile, and Hook used his hook to claw out, but he was mutated by the stomach acid, changed Hook to an uglier man. Ravello has many animals in front lions, bears, and tigers. Ravello gives another clue to his true identity when one of the Lost Boys asks Ravello his name: It must also be said that Hook in this book denies that he was ever with Blackbeard, claiming that he would never have served such an uneducated man and that all suggestions that he has are merely rumours started by his enemies. Disowned by Lord B. He describes many things as first-rate "Topping Swank", and punctuates his sentences with "The End". He is very interested in the French Revolution. A seventeen-year-old Colleger, Arthur Darling named after Arthur Llewelyn Davies is his rival in studies, fencing, sports, and the attentions of the visiting Ottoman Sultana Ananova Ariadne. When James successfully woos Ananova, their affection sets off political outrage that affects the noble position of Lord B. Upon leaving, James defeats Arthur in a final duel and burns his own school records to leave no traces of his behaviour. Peter and the Starcatchers[ edit ] In the novel Peter and the Starcatchers by Dave Barry and Ridley Pearson, Captain Hook is distinguished by halitosis, beady black eyes, a pock-marked face, and perpetual filth of his person and surroundings, contrasting strongly with J. The novel, which takes place before the Captain meets Peter Pan, calls Hook "Black Stache" for his prominent moustache, and his ship is called the Sea Devil; he captures the Jolly Roger, originally a British ship called the Wasp, later. Similar to the Disney film character, Black Stache resembles both a dangerous villain and a comic buffoon. The last of a line of villains, he seeks to become a great villain by fighting a great hero, and finds one in Peter. His hand is cut off not by Peter, but accidentally severed when he slams the lid of a trunk in a fit of a rage.

Lucky Pirates is rated 4. Rated 5 out of 5 by chipps from An oldie but a goodie Bought this one at least 4 years ago and still find myself going back to it after all this time. The battle system is great for someone like me. I also like the secondary weapons as well as the maps. I hope we get more like this. I love the unique gameplay concepts in this game. The variety of level types keeps the gameplay fresh. Highly recommend this for any match-3 lover! Likewise, I feel the game was designed to be very user-friendly. I really enjoyed all the different levels of play during the adventure. The re-playability of Lucky Pirates is noticeable from the outset of gameplay. I consider it to be one of the best Match-3 games that have ever been released. Mary Ann Takes the Cake!! Match 3, for sure yet there is so much to do and places to go and what a great adventure. Played the free hour, bought it one the spot when done and played it for 3 more hours. Still not done, there is a lot to do with this game, not just match 3, dragons, shipwrecks, pirates, battels, and I am still no where near the end and I hope it keeps going and going. Just fun and interesting and challenging! The help screens seemed endless and I was beginning to get confused as there was so much information being provided and so many varieties of games being covered, but I started game play and it all fell into place as each type of game was presented. By the end of the trial I was completely addicted and immediately purchased the game so I could continue playing. I always read the reviews on a game before trial, and I want to thank the many that provided some detail of game play - it really helped a lot to know that spears are more effective on monsters and cannons are more effective on ships. The graphics are fun and the audio is clever.
