Children need to develop the ability to manipulate their fingers in a coordinated manner in order to skillfully maneuver buttons, zippers, shoe laces, pencils Finger Dexterity is a necessary step in development of fine motor skills. This exercise game is a great one for development of precision in those little muscles of the hands, isolating fingers, and separating the two sides of the hand Try this activity to work on separating the two sides of the hand with a fun activity for kids. What is Finger Dexterity? Children develop their hand skills from infancy. Children also need to demonstrate dexterity in order to manipulate objects. They need to maneuver their fingers independently of one another this is called finger isolation and with separation of the two sides of the hand. Without these skills, modifications or adjustments are often made by the child. Separation of the two sides of the hand When using the small muscles of the hands in dexterity tasks, one uses the side of the thumb-side of the hand. The precision side of the hand is the thumb, pointer finger, and middle finger. These are the fingers needed for dexterity tasks and fine motor skills. The ring finger and pinkie finger are involved in providing stability during precision tasks. When the index and thumb are involved in a small motor activity, the ring finger and pinkie finger are tucked into the palm and proved a support during handwriting and shoe tying. They also provide power during grip and the force behind a gross grasp. So when will you see the two sides of the hand separated during activities?? This post contains affiliate links. I painted the back side of large bubble wrap with different colors. We let these dry and it was slightly difficult to remain patient!! Once our paints were dry, we got our fingers ready to play some finger dexterity games! I had Little Guy get his fingers ready by making "legs". This is a great way to encourage use of the two sides of the hand. He tucked his pinkie and ring fingers into the palm of his hand and got his pointer and middle finger busy as they "walked" around. We played a color matching game with the colored bubbles. I called out a color and he had to "walk" his fingers to the color and pop the color. He was working on color awareness at the same time as we practiced finger dexterity. As I called out defferent colors, he had to "walk" his fingers around to the dffernet colors. He really workied on those finger isolation skills as he searched for a bubble that was not yet popped. Other ways to work on finger isolation and separation of the two sides of the hand include using small objects in manipulation like crafting pom poms. Even Baby Girl wanted to get in on the fun! This finger dexterity exercise is a great way to "warm up" the hands before a handwriting or typing task for older children. When there is weakness in the small muscles of the hands, it is often times, difficult for children to write, color, or type with appropriate grasp and positioning of the fingers and wrist. A dexterity exercise like this one is a fun way to play and get those muscles of the hand moving and strengthened in order to improve endurance and positioning.
