Bedroom in Arles ; Vincent van Gogh, Furniture and other items in bedrooms vary greatly, depending on taste, local traditions and the socioeconomic status of an individual. Built-in closets are less common in Europe than in North America; thus there is greater use of freestanding wardrobes or armoires in Europe. However, there are certain items that are common in most bedrooms. Mattresses usually have a bed set to raise the mattress off the floor and the bed often provides some decoration. January A modern Western bedroom in England A hotel bedroom in Venice Many houses in North America have at least two bedrooms—usually a master bedroom and one or more bedrooms for either the children or guests. In some jurisdictions there are basic features such as a closet and a "means of egress" that a room must have in order to legally qualify as a bedroom. In many states, such as Alaska, bedrooms are not required to have closets and must instead meet minimum size requirements. A closet by definition is a small space used to store things. In a bedroom, a closet is most commonly used for clothes and other small personal items that one may have. Walk in closets are more popular today and vary in size. However, in the past wardrobes have been the most prominent. A wardrobe is a tall rectangular shaped cabinet that clothes can be stored or hung in. Clothes are also kept in a dresser. I was heading south to visit some family members for a few weeks, and unfortunately the only flight available included a 7 hour layover in Philadelphia. Not wanting to spend those hours huddled outside the airport, I rented the cheapest motel I could find, and took the shuttle over at about 11 PM. I checked in and headed to my room- Exhausted, I immediately collapsed on the bed. A bit lumpy, but not terrible. Not bothering to take my contacts out, I closed my eyes and let my thoughts wander. I was yanked back to reality by a loud grumbling from my stomach. As the microwave rattled away, I noticed a piece of paper wedged underneath it. I yanked it out and unfolded it. I tossed it aside and retrieved my soup. Feeling lonely, I hopped online to see if anyone was on. I was in luck- my long distance boyfriend happened to be on Skype. I called him up and we chatted awhile, trying to keep our voices down. Eventually, though, he said something that made me laugh, and I heard a muffled curse come from upstairs. Feeling guilty, I said my goodnights and ended the call, with the intention of getting a bit of rest before my next flight. Annoyed, I got up to close it. I was almost at the window when I heard it: I shook my head and reached for the curtain. There was a voice, directly outside my door. Someone was out there, looking in. I jumped back into bed and pulled the covers up to my chin. I know you can hear me. I can see in your bedroom. Are you listening to me? Come, take a look. Suddenly I heard the tenant upstairs moving around again. Footsteps stomped over to the door above, and I heard muffled shouting. I breathed a sigh of relief and leaned back against the pillow, determined to get some sleep. Come look out your window. The voice was back. I put my hands over my ears and rocked back and forth, trying to block out the sound. It was no use, the longer I sat there, the louder it got, until I could hear it so clearly, it sounded like it was right next to me. Frantic, I picked up the phone and dialed the police. As soon as I did, silence descended over the room. The air conditioner stopped, the street noises outside ceased, even the faint hum of electricity from the tv and lights went away. It pressed on my ears with a tangible heaviness that sent shivers through me. Next to me, my phone rang. The caller ID told me that it was the police station, calling me back. Cautiously, I picked it up and answered. And every light went out, plunging the room into complete and total darkness.

Get up to 4 Free Quotes! Zip Code Project Get Started! Building codes require a basement bedroom has a window for fire escape purposes. Larger is better, not only to make escape easier but also to allow firefighters packing tools and breathing equipment to enter the area quickly. Because this ruling is fairly recent in many parts of the country, most existing basements were not built with egress windows. You can solve the problem by cutting a large opening in a basement wall and adding a window that meets code requirements for egress. What will you get for your investment? The added light let in by the new, deep window can eliminate the dark and dank atmosphere so common to earlier basement finishes. The sensory difference can be remarkable. In basements, more than anywhere else, light is a critical design element. Of course, the primary benefit of a deep window is egress, an easily accessible opening through which you can escape or a firefighter can enter in the event of a basement fire. Basement fires are common, so this is really more than a code issue. With an extra legal bedroom, you could recover 10 to 20 times your window installation costs when you eventually sell your home. To begin, not all basement rooms need a legal egress window, but certainly no basement bedrooms will be allowed without one. Today, any bedroom-sized room with a closet is considered a bedroom, no matter what the blueprint says. As for size requirements, expect to need a window with an opening of 5. Some codes count the glass area, while others measure the area with the window open. In any case, a vertical casement window with six square feet of access is a good choice for a retrofit installation. The height of the window installation is also important. The bottom of the window opening should be no more than 44 inches off the floor. Outside, an oversize window well is required. It will need to be at least 36 inches wide and extend 36 inches out from the window. The window well height is also limited to 44 inches, as measured from the well floor.
