Having split his time between London and the White Isle for four years after moving to Spain to be with his now-husband, Essential Ibiza has had the pleasure of enjoying his soulful vocals live at many a sunset session or beach party, and, like many others, we were convinced he had the competition win in the proverbial bag. In fact, it was only a few weeks ago that the Essential Ibiza team bumped into Peyton in Bali, Indonesia, where he told us he was progressing well in the singing contest. Desperate to find out what happened and how he is feeling about this unexpected twist, we caught up with Peyton as soon as he returned to Ibiza, enjoying a catch-up over lunch at the beautiful Cotton Beach Club in Cala Tarida. How do you feel? I feel completely at peace. For me, to get to where I got and to have this reaction from the public was so positive and affirmative that I have no regrets. Is there anything you would have done differently in hindsight? The one thing that gives me such a sense of total acceptance is that there is absolutely nothing I would or could have done differently. I know I did my best. My voice was quite hoarse that day because I was jet-lagged and we had been filming all day, so I joked to Sharon that I sounded like Joe Cocker with pneumonia. I did the best I could with what I had that day. I understand why people are upset, but I also want to encourage them not to put out a lot of anger and bad energy directed at any of the contestants. There has been a huge backlash on social media against Honey G especially! Anyone who tries to make their dream come true and goes for it deserves at least a certain respect for taking a chance. But there is nothing to be gained from mocking people. What was it like to work with Sharon? I was extremely excited to have her as a mentor, she was exactly who I had hoped I would get, so the day we found out my category had Sharon was probably the happiest moment for me. It was very cool to go to her house and sing for her and Robbie Williams. You are very well known in the dance music industry. Why did you decide to enter the competition in the first place? During my first audition the judges all asked me why I was there because they knew of the career I have already had in dance music. I gave them a very honest answer, which was that I wanted change and I wanted more. I had come to a point in my career where I felt I needed to shake things up and change direction. I was bored and I was finding myself getting restless. Do you feel you have achieved what you wanted? I started winning the moment I went on that show and that was even before I got the amazing reaction from the public. Did you expect it? In order to take part in The X Factor, I prepared myself for the worst. So during the process I felt I never had time to prepare for the best. It never occurred to me this might happen. The recording contract is not the real prize, the public getting you and responding to you is. I have received so many beautiful messages about how hearing that song I Rise has touched people and helped them and that is better than any recording contract. I feel incredibly blessed. I fell in love with Relley C while we were in L. And although I barely had a chance to get to know her, I really like Emily Middlemas. You told us you have an album waiting in the wings? My writing has progressed a lot over the years and this is a grown-up record. The plan now is to finish up the album and carry on making music.

Christopher Michael Factor, 38, of Tiffin, passed away at his home Friday, August 25, On September 11, in Tiffin, he was born to William and Barbara (Hartzell) Factor III.

Even though he worked as a professional singer at the time, Chris was so nervous at his audition, he was near tears before he even began singing. After he finished, the waterworks were almost instant. Since the audition his YouTube, it has gotten over 49 million views and has gone viral on an international level. Everyone has seen this audition! On The X Factor UK, the judges could choose a wildcard, and the wildcard that had the most public votes would become the thirteenth finalist. Chris got to stay in the competition and for the first live week of performances, he had to pull out all the stops to try and stay in the game. For his performance, Chris chose to sing a Mariah Carey song. She felt that the song choice was brilliant and she was so impressed when he finished. Despite some criticism, Chris made it to week 3 because his powerful voice was undeniable and the reason he needed to stay in the competition. And boy did he look the part! He came out onto the stage with confidence, a silver suit, dance moves aplenty, and a flashing podium! Long gone was the man who cried during his audition. Louis Walsh was finally impressed with Chris again, complimenting how he managed to hit every note. He felt that the song was a perfect choice for Chris and he knew exactly how to rock it on the stage. This performance just proved that Chris really is meant to sing power ballads, whether the judges think that is cheesy or not. Nicole was impressed again, she felt he did an amazing job. But Chris really did nail it! At the end of the day, they wanted a singer who could produce music people would listen to on the radio today. Even though the judges were unsure of Chris at this point, the fans were still loving him and continued to vote for him to keep him on the show. For a song that is meant to be sung by a group, Chris really handled the power of this song and was able to deliver. His coach, Gary Barlow, was beyond proud of the hard work that Chris has been putting in every single week. That might not have been a compliment, but Chris certainly knows how to put on a good show! For week 9, Chris finally chose a song from the last 10 years, though it was another power ballad. The judges finally gave him the credit that he was due! Louis felt that his music was going to change his life and that Christopher deserved to be on the West End. Chris kept up with the newer songs for his second performance in week 9. However, as entertaining the song was, the judges felt that the song choice was not the best for the semi-finals. They felt that Josh Groban was an excellent choice, but Michael Buble was not. And he brought the passion and fire!
