Dahlin is considered a generational talent on the blue line and he was always going to go No. Another no-brainer at No. Svechnikov is the best forward prospect of the class thanks to his lethal offensive skill set. Story 3 Canadiens Jesperi Kotkaniemi, C: It appears the Canadiens made their selection based on immediate need over best available player. Kotkaniemi is considered by many to be the best center in this class thanks to his two-way play-making ability. Tkachuk going at No. He plays with a high motor, plenty of physicality, and is relentless on the puck. Hayton going in this spot is a major surprise. However, there are some concerns about his goal-scoring ability and many scouts had him outside of the Top Zadina is arguably the second-best goal scorer in this draft, so the Wings are pretty lucky to get him in this spot. The Czech winger is a dynamic offensive force with a deadly scoring touch. This is a great pick for Vancouver, who need an impact defenseman. Bovqist is an exciting offensive-minded defenseman with the skill set of a forward. Kravtsov is a dynamic winger with fantastic scoring ability. The Russian brings a mix of speed, size, skill, and grit and he should be a decent offensive piece for the Rangers to add to their long-term rebuilding effort. I really like this pick for Edmonton. They address a need while also taking one of the best players on the board. Bouchard is has an all-around game on the blue line. He has excellent hockey IQ and situational awareness. Wahlstrom is an explosive offensive force that has an incredible shot and could be a prolific goal-scorer in this league for years to come. The Islanders get really good value here. Dobson is a big, strong two-way player that projects to be a reliable and productive presence on the blue line. Well, this is surprising. Dallas clearly liked Dellandrea, who is a solid two-way hockey player that brings intangibles and leadership, but this is a generous spot for him. Dellandrea was ranked outside of the top 20 by just about everyone. Farabee is a foot player that brings skill, smarts and instincts to the wing. Denisenko is a great skater with the ability to make plays and snipe. The Czech winger has size at 6-foot-2 and brings a very quick shot and good passing ability. Smith is a prospect that the Devils hope will help their defensive corps down the road. This seems to be a little bit of a reach by Columbus at No. The Blue Jackets are banking on his ability to harness that raw athleticism and develop his two-way game a bit more. Ultimately, he could end up turning into a valuable depth piece on an NHL roster. Miller has size at 6-foot-4 and is a great athlete. This a safe, solid pick by the Ducks. Lundstrom is a powerful, smart center who can do a lot of things right. He may not be the most explosive or exciting talent in the class, but he brings a complete game and the potential to be a front-end impact player. This is an off-the-board pick by Minnesota. Still, seems like a reach here and there were players with more upside still on the board.

The three-day event began Monday night with a live MLB Network broadcast that covered the first round, supplemental first round, competitive balance round A, second round, competitive balance round B, and the supplemental second round. Here is the full draft order. The Tigers and San Francisco Giants finished with identical records last year, but because the Tigers had the worse record in , they received the No. This was the second time in history that the Tigers held the No. They selected Rice closer Matt Anderson with the No. That pick did not work out as hoped even though Anderson spent parts of seven seasons in the big leagues. Mize is the first college righty taken with the No. Free agent compensation rules were changed with the latest collective bargaining agreement. Every team keeps their first round pick now. We here at CBS Sports provided instant analysis of all 30 first round picks Monday night, live as the selections are announced. Here is a breakdown of all 30 first round picks in the draft. Widely considered the favorite for the top overall pick for the last several weeks, Mize pitched to a 3. Mize sits low-to-mid 90s with his heater with what is said to be an excellent splitter and plus slider. His control is his calling card, though. The consensus top catcher in the draft class, Bart is an outstanding defender and Georgia Tech even lets him call his own games, a rarity these days. He can swing it, too. In the regular season, Bart hit. Bart also has gotten to know Yellow Jackets alum Matt Wieters, who works out with the team in the offseason. He entered this season with a broken hand, but he came back with a vengeance, hitting. India is known to be a standout defender at third base, to the point that many scouting types believe he could hold his own at shortstop. The 6-foot-1 junior this season for the Gators hit. A 6-foot-1 lefty, Kelenic is considered a stellar overall player, seeing marks as high as 60 with power, defense, speed and arm. Many like his power to increase as he ages, too, so he likely profiles as a right fielder. The younger Weathers has a fastball in the low- to mids with excellent life, and he also has a curve and changeup that project as MLB-caliber offerings. A lanky righty, Stewart is 6-foot-6 and pounds. Murray has split his time between baseball and football the last few years, and last season he backed up quarterback Baker Mayfield, the No. Murray is expected to play football in the fall before committing to baseball full-time. A 5-foot lefty, Swaggerty has the speed and arm to handle center field at the big-league level. This season, he hit. He also stole nine bases in 14 attempts. The heater is his breadwinner, though he does have a pair of breaking balls. Groshans is a right-handed hitter with a history of punishing elite competition in showcase events. He has a sound approach and is expected to grow into power in the coming years. Groshans, who is committed to Kansas, is a good athlete with a strong arm who profiles best at third base long-term. That speed helps make him a plus defensive center fielder. Scott is also a pitcher, albeit without the ceiling he has as a position player. Gilbert will inevitably receive comparison to Jacob deGrom due to his affiliation with Stetson and his long hair. Gilbert does most of his work with a lows fastball. He complements his heat with a pair of quality secondary offerings. His solid build, repeatable mechanics, and "easy gas" suggest he has a shot to stay healthy. Liberatore is a 6-foot-5 left-hander. He sits in the lows with his fastball and backs that up with an old-school, "to-6" curveball. He also mixes in on occasion a quality changeup. Adams is a two-sport star who is scheduled to play baseball and football wide receiver at the University of North Carolina. His elite speed should allow him to remain in center field and develop into a menace on the basepaths. There is some belief he could come into average power with time, making him a well-rounded offensive threat. Singer was drafted in the second round out of high school in , but chose to play in the SEC instead. In 13 regular-season starts, Singer was with a 2. The 6-foot-5 right-hander sits near the mids with a good slider and decent enough change. While the lefty-swinging Gorman strikes out a bit, he has some of the best raw power in this draft class. His elite bat speed should transfer to the pros. Oregon State has a history of producing big-league outfielders, and Larnach will look to follow in the footsteps of Jacoby Ellsbury and Michael Conforto. Larnach will likely slide over to left field in pro ball because his speed and range leave something to be desired in center. Going into the draft season, Turang was a potential No. An uneven spring has caused his stock to tumble, however. His upside exceeds his draft slot. Turang is committed to Louisiana State. Rolison is a draft-eligible sophomore, so he may not be an easy signing. He boasts a deep repertoire, good velocity by lefty standards, and a potent fastball-curveball combo. Seigler is a switch-hitter and switch-thrower who has performed well against elite competition in showcase events. He knows the zone and projects as a high on-base hitter with good contact rates. Hoerner has never not hit, and he has a long track record of success against top competition. There is some thought he will move to second base down the road.
