Chapter 3 : Vote | Definition of Vote by Merriam-Webster

Polling day for the local elections is TODAY, May 3, , as councils go up for grabs in England. Voting can be done in a number of ways - by proxy, by post, or in person.

Voting system and Election In Switzerland , without need to register, every citizen receives at home the ballot papers and information brochure for each voting and can send it by post. Switzerland has a direct democracy system and votes are organised about four times a year. Different voting systems use different types of votes. Plurality voting does not require the winner to achieve a vote majority, or more than fifty percent of the total votes cast. In a voting system that uses a single vote per race, when more than two candidates run, the winner may commonly have less than fifty percent of the vote. A side effect of a single vote per race is vote splitting , which tends to elect candidates that do not support centrism , and tends to produce a two-party system. An alternative to a single-vote system is approval voting. To understand why a single vote per race tends to favor less centric candidates, consider a simple lab experiment where students in a class vote for their favorite marble. If five marbles are assigned names and are placed "up for election", and if three of them are green, one is red, and one is blue, then a green marble will rarely win the election. The reason is that the three green marbles will split the votes of those who prefer green. In fact, in this analogy, the only way that a green marble is likely to win is if more than sixty percent of the voters prefer green. If the same percentage of people prefer green as those who prefer red and blue, that is to say if 33 percent of the voters prefer green, 33 percent prefer blue, and 33 percent prefer red, then each green marble will only get eleven percent of the vote, while the red and blue marbles will each get 33 percent, putting the green marbles at a serious disadvantage. If the experiment is repeated with other colors, the color that is in the majority will still rarely win. In other words, from a purely mathematical perspective, a single-vote system tends to favor a winner that is different from the majority. If the experiment is repeated using approval voting , where voters are encouraged to vote for as many candidates as they approve of, then the winner is much more likely to be any one of the five marbles, because people who prefer green will be able to vote for every one of the green marbles. The winner must receive a majority, which is more than half. An alternative to the Two-round voting system is the single round instant-runoff voting system Also referred to as Alternative vote or Preferential voting as used in some elections in Australia, Ireland and the USA. Voters rank each candidate in order of preference 1,2,3 etc. Votes are distributed to each candidate according to the preferences allocated. The system is designed to produce the same result as an exhaustive ballot but using only a single round of voting. In a voting system that uses a multiple vote, the voter can vote for any subset of the alternatives. Approval voting uses such multiple votes. In a voting system that uses a ranked vote, the voter has to rank the alternatives in order of preference. For example, they might vote for Bob in first place, then Emily, then Alice, then Daniel, and finally Charlie. Ranked voting systems , such as those famously used in Australia, use a ranked vote. In a voting system that uses a scored vote or range vote , the voter gives each alternative a number between one and ten the upper and lower bounds may vary. See cardinal voting systems. Some "multiple-winner" systems may have a single vote or one vote per elector per available position. In such a case the elector could vote for Bob and Charlie on a ballot with two votes. These types of systems can use ranked or unranked voting, and are often used for at-large positions such as on some city councils. Referendums[edit] Most of the time, when the citizens of a country are invited to vote, it is for an election. However, people can also vote in referendums and initiatives. Since the end of the eighteenth century, more than five hundred national referendums including initiatives were organised in the world; among them, more than three hundred were held in Switzerland. strongly reject may sometimes be at least as important as choosing the one that they most favor. Disapproval voting Negative voting allows a vote that expresses disapproval of a candidate. For explanatory purposes, consider a hypothetical voting system that uses negative voting. In this system, one vote is allowed, with the choice of either for a candidate, or against a candidate. The candidate with the highest net favorability is the winner. Note that not only is a negative total possible, but also, a candidate may even be elected with 0 votes if enough negative votes are cast against their opponents. Under this implementation, negative voting is no different from a positive voting system, when only two candidates are on the ballot. However, in the case of three or more candidates, each negative vote for a candidate counts positively towards all of the other candidates. Consider the following example: Three candidates are running for the same seat. Two hypothetical election results are given, contrasting positive and negative voting. Both polling accuracy and voter turnout are assumed to be percent. Current standing in the polls Candidate.

Most Democrats " whose candidate leads in the popular vote -- support switching to the popular vote, while most Republicans " whose candidate leads in electoral votes -- favor keeping the Electoral College system. Fifty-seven percent disapprove of electors voting for someone other than the candidate who won the most votes in their state or Congressional District in the case of Maine and Nebraska. Majorities of Republicans and independents disapprove, but a slim majority of Democrats approve of such action. Three in four Americans are aware that Hillary Clinton is ahead in the popular vote. Majorities across party lines say she is ahead, but 27 percent of Republicans think President-elect Donald Trump is winning the popular vote. Throughout the presidential campaign, most voters nationwide held an unfavorable view of Hillary Clinton as well as Donald Trump. Despite leading in the popular vote, opinions of Hillary Clinton remain negative and largely unchanged from before the presidential election. This poll was conducted by telephone December , among a random sample of 1, adults nationwide. Phone numbers were dialed from samples of both standard land-line and cell phones. The poll employed a random digit dial methodology. For the landline sample, a respondent was randomly selected from all adults in the household. For the cell sample, interviews were conducted with the person who answered the phone. Interviews were conducted in English and Spanish using live interviewers. The data have been weighted to reflect U. Census figures on demographic variables. The error due to sampling for results based on the entire sample could be plus or minus three percentage points. The error for subgroups may be higher and is available by request. The margin of error includes the effects of standard weighting procedures which enlarge sampling error slightly.
