In elementary school, Yearwood sang in musicals, choir groups and talent shows. In high school, Yearwood and her sister Beth were A students, and Yearwood wanted to become an accountant. Yearwood was also a member of the National Beta Club. After graduating, she moved to Nashville to become an agent for musicians. After having no luck at that, she decided to try her hand at singing and enrolled at Young Harris College in the mountains of northeast Georgia, where she received an associate degree and became a member of the Phi Theta Kappa honor society. After dropping out, Yearwood gained an internship with MTM Records and was eventually hired as a full-time employee. The pair developed a friendship and Brooks promised to help Yearwood sign a recording contract if his career succeeded. Brooks brought her to his producer, Allen Reynolds, who then brought her to Garth Fundis. Fundis and Yearwood soon began working together, and together they created a demo tape. MCA record producer, Tony Brown was impressed by her vocal ability at the concert and helped her sign a recording contract with MCA Nashville Records shortly afterwards. Career diversification[edit] In , Yearwood released her second studio album, Hearts in Armor, which was critically acclaimed. The album was a departure from her previous album, as it contained almost all ballads and some collaborations with other music artists, including Don Henley, Emmylou Harris and Raul Malo of the country music band, The Mavericks. Harris is featured singing background vocals on a song she previously recorded, "Woman Walk the Line". Music critics gave the album praise and some of the highest reviews of her career. Like her previous effort, it was certified platinum. Like her second album, it included collaborations with artists Rodney Crowell and Willie Nelson. The album mainly consisted of ballads and each song also contained larger melodies. The album was given mixed reviews. AllMusic gave the album three out of five stars, calling the songs "a little uneven". Late s success[edit] Yearwood released her first greatest hits compilation in August titled, Songbook A Collection of Hits. Unlike her previous album, Songbook was praised by most music critics, including AllMusic who called it "a near-definitive collection". The album included three new tracks that were eventually released as singles. She is still a member. Like her second album, it contained her emotional conflicts following the separation, and therefore it gained critical praise. It was given high critical acclaim from AllMusic, quoting Real Live Woman as a "measured, deliberate record in the best possible sense. It was produced by Mark Wright and unlike her past albums, Inside Out contained love themes. Return to music[edit] In September, Yearwood released her first album of new recordings in four years titled, Jasper County. Between and , Yearwood took time off to record music as well as to wed Garth Brooks. Jasper County was produced by Garth Fundis and was named after the county Yearwood was raised in as a child. The album received many positive reviews by music critics, including AllMusic writer Stephen Thomas Erlewine, who called Jasper County "an album that stretches further musically than most of her albums while being more cohesive than most of her records as well. Yearwood left the label after over 16 years with them, and selling over ten million records. AllMusic gave the album four and a half out five stars, and called it their "album pick". It eventually reached a peak of 25 in June. Lucky called "Breaking Apart". Hit After Hit, was released on November 17, The show is a contemporary retelling of the Passion of Jesus Christ set to popular music with a mixture of live and pre-recorded segments. The song was created to celebrate 50 years of the CMA Awards. This song also features James Taylor. Musicianship[edit] Yearwood has found major influences in a variety of musical artists. She grew accustomed to influence from southern rock bands, which include The Allman Brothers, Eagles, as well as country rock artists such as Emmylou Harris, Elvis Presley, and James Taylor. Yearwood stated that her primary musical influence is Linda Ronstadt, whom Yearwood had often been identified and compared within her albums. I knew the albums so well I knew which song it was from the first note. Yearwood said that she has never considered herself as a songwriter, but is precise about choosing songs that she can relate to. She stated, "I always select music based on emotion, how it makes me feel, even before I made records. The song was available for download via the Sears website. Yearwood first joined along with husband, Garth Brooks in and helped in the Hurricane Katrina disaster relief by building flood walls in New Orleans and protective structures in Mississippi. The project saw two hundred crews of women learn to build houses in Atlanta , Georgia and Oklahoma. For the project, Yearwood learned to construct and build simple and affordable houses for Habitat for Humanity construction sites nationwide. The cookbook includes other recipes passed down from her family and liner notes describing each recipe. It includes recipes for such food as fried chicken, ribs, meatloaf, and cheesecake. The book consists of recipes passed down through her mother, aunts, cousins and longtime friends. B Bowl Of Butter. She appeared on the show at various times until Quinn, Medicine Woman in as a choir director. Yearwood has also stated she is interested in performing in a Broadway musical, but not "anytime soon". The show is shot in Nashville and features Trisha cooking family recipes and sharing healthy tips to enjoy lighter versions of the traditionally heavier southern cuisine. She married her first husband, musician Chris Latham, in ; they divorced in On May 21, , she married Robert "Bobby" Reynolds, a bass player for the country music group The Mavericks ; they divorced in Yearwood and her current husband Garth Brooks had been close friends since before they both became nationally known in the s; in , after Brooks filed for divorce from estranged wife Sandy Mahl, they began dating [62] and Yearwood took a four-year hiatus from music. On May 25, , Brooks proposed to Yearwood in front of 7, fans in Bakersfield, California , and she accepted without hesitation.
