Chapter 1 : The Ancestors of My Grandchildren - John Tisdale

The descendants of John Tisdale () colonial Massachusetts Item Preview.

Within two years of the establishment of the colony centered in Boston, its population was estimated by Governor John Winthrop at around 4,000. It is only natural, therefore, that many of these colonists and their children would look for and move into other areas nearby that perhaps were not so crowded. Just south of Boston, in the Plymouth colony, and in other new New England settlements land was more available, and families took advantage of the opportunity to build a homestead. The family of Robert and Mary was no exception. Robert himself moved from Boston to Watertown, Mass. His daughters Ruth and Mary both lived with their families in Watertown. Nathaniel, his only son, married twice and lived in Boston until when he moved to Bristol then Mass. He was one of the original founders of the town there. It was with the children and grandchildren of Nathaniel that the intermarriages with Pilgrim families began. The oldest children of Nathaniel from his first marriage established their families in Boston including his son Nathaniel. The family of this second Nathaniel moved to Bridgewater, Mass. She was the daughter of Thomas and Martha Harris Snell. Nathaniel and Mary lived for only a short time in Boston before moving to Bridgewater. They had two sons, Nathaniel and Thomas. Nathaniel 3d died at age 26, less than three years after his marriage. Mary remarried to David Ames of Bridgewater, where the two Reynolds boys grew up. Some of the Mayflower families had originally founded the town and their families remained there. Reynolds stated that he believed she was the daughter of Amasa and Rebecca Delano Turner. The records of the Mayflower Society indicate, however, that she was the daughter of Japhet Turner. Joseph and Jemima raised their family in Bridgewater, though later in life they moved to Auburn, Maine to live with their son Ichabod. She was the g-g-granddaughter of Thomas and Martha Harris Snell. Both Jemima and Mary were Mayflower descendants. It is not unusual therefore that there were many intermarriages with other prominent and well-established families. Joseph and Sarah had several children, among whom were Sarah and Elizabeth. Sarah married Daniel Bradford Jr. The Bradford ancestry is: Job was the son of Gershom and Priscilla Wiswall Bradford and follows the same ancestry as his brother Daniel outlined above. Of note is Col. There may be other Mayflower connections not mentioned here that will be found with some additional research. Acceptance into the Society of Mayflower Descendants on any of these lines is possible. However, the Society requires documentation and verified proof of each family connection, as should always be the standard for accepting anyone as an ancestor. References are given above as stated in the various sources used and should be verified before accepting them as truth. Genealogical Register of Plymouth Families.
