Comments Whoa, look at this thing! The all-terrain terror truck is based on the ECX Barrage trail truck which we like a lot—see the March review and gets new, wider axles to go with its monster makeover. Everything you need to run the Doomsday is in the box. Metal ring-and-pinion gears are tucked into the axle housings, and steel universal joints outfit the fat telescoping shafts that join the axles to the transmission. Plated aluminum C-hubs are fitted up front, with CV-style joints contributing to smooth power delivery. The axles are capped by standard 12mm drive hexes, making it easy to fit aftermarket wheels. The Doomsday shares its transmission and steel universal joints with the Temper and Barrage, but gets a new motor plate to hold its larger motor. That means more rpm and torque. The transmission is held in place by a compact plastic skidplate, and the shock towers hold adjustable-height body posts. The plow-style front and stamped-aluminum rear bumpers are adjustable too, and telescope in and out with about 35mm of adjustment apiece. The steering linkages are 5mm steel rods, just like the suspension links. The included mAh battery is good for more than 30 minutes of run time. The trim dials are left uncovered for easy access. A nicely detailed blower and dangling skull join flying side pipes and bullet headlights on the detailed body. But if you want to minimize downtime, I suggest you buy something extra—namely a fast charger, like the Dynamite Prophet Sport NiMH or a similar unit. I went ahead and fast-charged the pack to hit the trail sooner, and hoofed it about a quarter mile via sidewalk to get to my favorite spot. I let the truck get ahead of me so that I could point it at obstacles along the way, and the Doomsday showed off good articulation as it rolled over landscaping boulders and roots. My test spot is located beneath an elevated road and along a creekbed, and the first challenge I gave the Doomsday was a run up the degree concrete embankment that reaches up to the road. I backed down by easing into neutral and letting gravity do the rest, with a bit of brake when the truck built up more steam than I liked. Sidehilling resulted in some slip but not enough to impede forward progress. I got lucky and the truck landed on all fours, so I just drove out of the creek. Along the way, I noted an added bonus of the chevron tread design: In all, I found the Doomsday to be a fun 4X4, and it looks great in action. April 3, 2013

The doomsday trail. [Ray Hogan] -- Special U.S. Marshal John Rye, the "Doomsday Marshal," is on assignment to bring in the man who had put three bullets in Judge Orson Brite. He apprehends a man and woman on the trail, but his.

MacGyver is in London visiting an old friend at a birthday party when his friend is killed in a coordinated attack. In his quest to bring the killers to justice, he stumbles upon a nefarious plan involving nuclear weapons. Elise, I must have an answer! Massey Try the library. The chase scene while MacGyver is on the lam from the police. A very bizarre scene after MacGyver is gassed in the sewers. He puts his head down in a puddle and then we see some imagery of him sinking to the bottom of a sea. Uses a tennis racket and some wires to unscrew the metal container containing the nuclear bomb. The nuclear control room seems like an odd place for a tennis racket -- maybe the castle was near Wimbledon! We get things off to a fun start as MacGyver is zipping past Big Ben on his way to the English countryside in a red sports car, all while a happy Ken Harrison theme plays in the background. The festive mood is interrupted by a flashback scene where MacGyver and another man are struggling to climb a snowy mountain -- MacGyver is wearing a very cool looking yellow and black hat here. Once the flashback ends, the jolliness continues as MacGyver drives up to the country estate. His hair has the dyed dark brown look, similar to the end of Holy Rose 2. Some familiar names in the credits, including director Charles Correll directed 19 episodes going back to Season 1 and writer John Considine frequent guest star and writer of several episodes. Well, a quick check of IMDB reveals in this case it actually is him! Pretty cool for these two to say that they were in the possibly the greatest ever film and the greatest ever tv series. Regardless, we have some well-armed villains and a full fledged mystery on our hands. The scene in the manor where MacGyver, Natalia, and Frederick are talking to law enforcement has a definite "British tv" feel. Whoa, Natalia is packing heat! Tremendous scene as MacGyver goes undercover in an attempt to get ingratiated with a London underworld boss. After taking a few hits, MacGyver gets the better of him by spraying some powder in his face. Then when the leader tells MacGyver to kill the man, MacGyver refuses but actually does fire a machine gun near the leader for effect. I love it -- a dark, gritty situation where MacGyver has to go undercover feels a little Jack Bauer-like. He ultimately sticks to his principles i. MacGyver now has earned himself a private meeting with the leader, and they meet in front of the Tower Bridge. Things are still rolling in the middle part of the movie as MacGyver goes into investigative mode trying to solve the mystery. I like the scene in the ancient-looking library where MacGyver is doing research, and he takes the glasses belonging to the older gentleman sitting next to him and uses them as a magnifying glass. Quick reaction by our hero jumping out of the exploding car, and then a good scene between MacGyver and the inspector. A ton of action here as described in the highlight -- great stuff. Another great chase scene as MacGyver sees Natalia shot by the side of the road more on this later and then leads the masked men through the dark streets of London and then into the sewers. Well, I keep waiting for the bottom to fall out and it just keeps getting better and better! Still 25 minutes left, however, and enough time for the bottom to fall out. I love chase motifs and sneaking around, and this movie has a lot of that. Creative use of the belt to repel up the pole. Some great and brand new Harrison music here too. I love the set, and the moments where MacGyver is walking around the halls of the empty castle are fantastic. Whoa, the daughter is still alive! And the doctor is in on it! A double shocker that I did not see coming at all. Frederick, how could you?! And now we see Nataia is in on it too! After MacGyver pushes Natalia to the ground, he just turns his back on her and continues turning the switches to the off position. Did he really think she would just give up at this point? Wait a minute, she armed the bomb? Reminds me a little of Goldeneye and the British agent who is actually anti-England. Hard to believe that this is not only the final moment in the series but also the last scene for "The MacGyver Project. That was outstanding, much better than I had imagined. There are many elements that make up a great MacGyver episode recently summarized nicely in a guest post on this blog such as an international setting check , sterling production quality check , heightened threat level double check , and strong villains check , and this movie has all of those qualities in spades along with darkness levels that would make Season 4 seem like a beach vacation. The acting was great, the music solid, and the locales and sets tremendous. Where does it rank in the list? That may be too low, but I need to see it a few more times to feel better about moving it up too much higher. Perhaps I had such low expectations and was surprised that it was half decent, or maybe I had hallucinated or inhaled too many fumes. So where do we go from here now that there are no more episodes or movies left?
