Journal and practice daily. The Ellipsis Manual was written for engineering human behavior and producing predictable behavior outcomes. The methods can be used in therapy, intelligence, sales, and almost any social interaction. Whenever you are experiencing something most people would be stressed about, find as many things around you to be thankful for as you can; imagine how many people around the world would trade places with you to have the life that you have. Firmly believe that things are stressful only when you compare them to something much more desirable. Get used to the awareness of depth; the small aspects of each situation are deeper than anyone realizes. The social magnetism of people who enjoy themselves is undeniable. People gravitate to those who are having a good time because the happiness is contagious. People want to feel good, so they attempt to absorb good feelings from highly positive operators. The gratitude lessons above will provide the foundation upon which your enjoyment levels will be built. Without one, the other cannot stand. Make it a daily practice to enjoy what you are doing. You are coming off as fragmented. You should probably just start blowing your rape whistle. The first section appears to be for cops and people who think their spouse is cheating on them. The second section appears to be personality profiling. It would need to be re-written, but this is what you want to present yourself as. Throwing in a few cues to know what to do and not do with your hands will only help. The section on leadership was great. Feels plagiarized from somewhere else because the tone is so completely different. The section on building rapid rapport may be the most useful to the average non-creeper something that could use more friends. Is this really the image you want to project with your book? The obviously shitty excel tables The fonts are blurry in half of them. And the inconsistent Needs section needs to go. Either new one or old one. Power is omitted from some excel table sections, but written in in paragraph form. Very little on seduction, but heavily implied throughout. Some better examples of human needs. Ricer rocket guys for admiration and Harley guys for uniqueness? Martha Stewart for Power? Since reading this, I do find it interesting to now read about fictional or historical characters and get a better idea of what they would be like. This could be part of the examples, Dracula would be a and bill Clinton a There is a whole section on lie detection, which was not relevant for me. I am not a police or intelligence officer, so if people lie to me, it generally has little effect. What is nore important to me is influencing people to take the actions I want them to take. Whether working with my children, wife, friends or customers. Look to the eyes! It shares a philosophy on how an operator may develop these skills while bringing together the skills and knowledge required to be a strategist and live operations in one place. These operations just happen to be our life right now. Knowledge of these tactics will not stop them being used against you. Knowledge here can make you aware that some one may be deliberately set you in their sites. This book has a highlight on direct or authoritarian influence tactics, but it also coverts passive and covert methods. This book covers the information across a variety of fields and offers suggestions on how to use them in everyday contexts. It is a short step to use this to create a operations manual for any situation. This is a very good read and I happily place this book on my reference shelf.

Worksheet for This Episode While a rebellious John Mellencamp once bragged openly about his Sisyphean conflict with an authority that was always winning, research suggests that most of us are wired to obey those we consider to be authoritative even when doing so goes against everything for which we think we stand. In other words, you can learn and master all the social skills you can fit in your own personal psychological arsenal, but being perceived as an authority figure is ultimately the most powerful force for influence there is. More About This Show In the s, Yale psychologist Stanley Milgram famously conducted a series of experiments that measured just how far participants would go when instructed by an authority figure to inflict a test subject with gradually increasing electric shocks. On an alarmingly consistent basis, participants would eventually administer what they believed to be a fatal dose of electricity to these subjects when the authority figure present – usually just some guy in a lab coat – ordered them to do so. Analysis and Engineering of Human Behavior. But it seems human beings are evolutionarily hard-wired to obey authority. The price for defying a prehistoric despot in the tiny tribal communities that eventually coalesced into civilizations was likely death or exile, so our ancestors were the ones who fell in line. And while this may have served us well as a survival mechanism in the past, it can be used by those in the know to manipulate us into operating counter to our best intentions. Five Factors That Activate Followership When we want to assess our own handle on authority, Chase gives us these five factors that comprise the Hughes Authority Self-Assessment Matrix – give yourself a grade from one to five for each item five being the best using this PDF as a guideline. In a tenth of a second, people will decide whether or not you are someone they need to listen to or not; a large majority of this unconscious decision will be based on how you look. Not only your appearance, but your carriage and demeanor. Rapport is just a matter of whether you can create serotonin and dopamine. Get it handled and the small unconscious signals your body was sending out will disappear.
