Introduction to the concept of the encyclopedia and its use. To introduce second grade students to the concept of an encyclopedia and to train in the basic use of an encyclopedia Objectives: By the completion of this lesson, TLW be able to: Explain the general purpose of an encyclopedia. Describe how to use an encyclopedia both by volume and by index. Define the following terms: Guide words, ABC alphabetical order , article, index. One encyclopedia volume per child. Set of cards with a subject from each encyclopedia volume that include the name of the encyclopedia set in which it is found that is arranged in volume order by set. If necessary, prompt with "your favorite sport? Encyclopedias are books with information on many subjects. Encyclopedias are sets of several books. Each separate book is called a volume. Each volume contains part of the alphabet. Within the volume, the subjects are arranged in ABC order. Each subject has its own article, which is the information about the subject. Another way to find information is to use the index, which is a giant list in ABC order that gives the page number for every single subject in the encyclopedia. The index also includes notes called "see also" notes. Some encyclopedia sets have an index in each volume; others have the index in its own volume at the end. Demonstrate the above throughout the the explanation using a topic like "dinosaur" or "tiger" using an encyclopedia with an index at the end and one with the index in the volume. Distribute one encyclopedia volume to each child. Ask them to place their finger on the volume number, then the letter of the volume. Point out guide words. Children with low reading skills can work with a "buddy. By walking around and checking with the students, I will see if they are able to locate their concept. As the activity concludes, I will ask for a verbal review of the terms. What is a volume? What is an index? I will point out where the encyclopedias are usually shelved in the media center and invite them to use them whenever they want to.
