May 18, Updated: May 19, at Benfield, a bow hunter looking for deer, knew that panthers eat deer. So he aimed an arrow at the endangered animal and let fly. He even dismantled his tree stand. But after a three-year investigation into the death of the panther, Benfield pleaded guilty Friday in federal court in Fort Myers. He also cannot hunt in Florida or any other state for three years. He had to forfeit his bow, arrows and tree stand and make a public apology. No sentencing date has been set yet. Fish and Wildlife Service officials, who led the investigation, did not respond to repeated requests for details on how they caught Benfield. However, his written apology offers some clues. Although he moved the body the next day, a Florida Fish and Wildlife Commission employee discovered the carcass on Oct. However, state and federal investigators returned with a search warrant for his house and car "where they collected evidence of my crime. What happened between then and Friday, however, is not mentioned in his statement. Collier County court records show he has been fined twice for violating state hunting rules. He has also been previously arrested for carrying a concealed weapon. We should all work together to make sure the deer population is healthy enough for both. Billie shot and skinned a panther in , saying he did it as part of a religious ritual. He was acquitted by a jury after his attorney raised questions about panther genetics. The second man hauled into court was a deer hunter named Elmer Booker who in said he shot a panther because he feared it might climb his tree stand and kill him. Although he pleaded guilty, the judge, an avid hunter, refused to put him in jail and instead sentenced him to probation. Last year, a Georgia deer hunter pleaded guilty to killing a panther that had roamed so far from South Florida that it had crossed the state line in There are at least three other panther deaths since that remain under investigation. Times staff researcher Carolyn Edds contributed to this report.
