Beaufort L of 42 Squadron. Although it did see some use as a torpedo bomber, including attacks on the battleships Scharnhorst and Gneisenau while in port in Brest , the Beaufort more often used bombs in European service. The Beaufort was a much faster, heavier aircraft than the biplane and the crews needed a great deal of training in torpedo-dropping, using new techniques required by the Beaufort. One Beaufort failed to return. The Beaufort still had teething problems and after some Beauforts were lost in mysterious circumstances, a Court of Enquiry in June concluded that the Taurus engines were still unreliable and both operational squadrons were grounded until the engines could be modified. Four days later, the first "Rover" was mounted; a Rover was an armed reconnaissance mission carried out against enemy shipping by a small number of aircraft operating independently. The only other UK based units to be equipped and fly operationally with the Beaufort, 86 Squadron and Squadron , were operational by the middle of A successful torpedo drop required that the approach run to the target needed to be straight and at a speed and height where the torpedo would enter the water smoothly: Height over the water had to be judged without the benefit of a radio altimeter and misjudgement was easy, especially in calm conditions. It also took some distance for the torpedo to settle to its running depth. A sharp pull-up could be fatal as it exposed a large area of the aircraft to anti-aircraft guns. L was lost during a bombing raid on Lorient, France, on 20 December The first attack was on 21 June , when nine Beauforts of 42 Squadron attacked the German battleship Scharnhorst off the Norwegian coast. The Beauforts encountered Messerschmitt Bf s protecting the battleship and only four returned; shortly after, Beauforts were grounded for modifications to their Taurus engines. Photo reconnaissance revealed that the ship was in the inner harbour. It was planned to attack the torpedo nets thought to be protecting the ship, using three Beauforts armed with bombs; another three Beauforts would then attack the ship with torpedoes. Following heavy rain that had drenched the airfield, the bomb-carrying aircraft became bogged down. Scott of Canada, the Distinguished Flying Medal. The other two crew members were Sgts R. Mallis; all were lost. At midnight, a signal from a Blenheim of Squadron confirmed the position of the ships but most of the Beauforts failed to find them. Only 86 and squadrons were in position to attack the German ships. Of the 33 Beauforts, 28 eventually set out to attack the German ships: Only 11 Beauforts sighted the battleships and launched torpedoes, none of which struck a target. A report reached Coastal Command on 16 May that this ship, escorted by two destroyers, was off Trondheim steaming south-west at high speed. Prinz Eugen was sighted with four destroyers. The Beaufighters went first, raking the ships with cannon fire as the Blenheims made dummy torpedo runs. Some Bf s more than likely from I. Three Beauforts were shot down by defensive fire from the ships before they could launch their torpedoes and the nine torpedoes which were launched failed to hit the target. One Beaufort, already damaged by anti-aircraft fire, was then attacked by three Bf s: In the meantime another strike force of 15 Beauforts from 86 Squadron was sent too far north by a reporting error. They too were attacked by Bf s: Beaufighters were used for the first time for flak-suppression and escort and there had been diversionary tactics used to try to reduce attention on the attacking torpedo aircraft. It also marked the end of Beaufort operations from Britain. In October it was re-equipped with Consolidated Liberator Mk. One ex Squadron Beaufort flight, along with one from Squadron, joined up with a flight from 39 Squadron on Malta , later becoming a part of a reconstituted 39 Squadron. Is the following August. Few of the Beaufort crews had experience in night-flying: Aldridge torpedoed and crippled the heavy cruiser Trento , whose anti-aircraft fire started only after the Beaufort had escaped. In the confusion and the smokescreen which had been laid by the Italian warships, Squadron claimed several torpedo hits for the loss of one Beaufort which belly-landed at Luqa. In spite of the claims, none of the other ships had been hit. At night, torpedo-carrying Vickers Wellingtons of 38 Squadron [60] also played an important part in attacking convoys. Some important ships destroyed or badly damaged were: Torpedoed by four Beauforts of 39 Sqn, 21 February During the first years of World War II , the Australian government found itself unable to procure twin-engine bomber aircraft for home duties in Australia. Q Flight, a detachment from Squadron was based in Australia for operational conversion purposes. Only six Australian-built Beauforts reached Singapore, just after hostilities began. Over Malaya and Singapore, Squadron continued to operate Vildebeests, [67] suffering severe losses. One Beaufort, attached to Air Headquarters, Singapore as a reconnaissance aircraft was attacked, during its first sortie, by Japanese fighters, severely damaged and written-off. As Japanese forces approached Singapore in early , RAF bases there were abandoned; the remaining Beauforts and Squadron personnel were evacuated to Australia. The first Beaufort unit formed in Australia, on 25 February was No. In the light of the problems encountered by the first Beauforts based at Singapore, the unit was carefully trained and slowly brought up to operational status. Its first operational sorties were carried out on 25 June when a Japanese ship heading towards Lae , New Guinea was attacked by five Beauforts operating from Port Moresby , which resulted in three Beauforts hitting the ship with bombs, with one Beaufort being damaged by anti-aircraft fire. Out of two Beauforts which carried out a diversionary attack on Lae, one failed to return. You can help by adding to it. October British[edit] Beaufort Mk. First British production version. II conversions from Mk II. Trainer with rear turret position faired over; allocated to Torpedo training units and OTUs. Similar to the Beaufort Mk V, but fitted with a larger tail.

Beaufort Historic District Beaufort, South Carolina Homes in the Old Point neighborhood Remnants of the original English colonial settlement of Beaufort can be found in the downtown or historic district area. With approximate dimensions, downtown is defined as anything upon the peninsula jutting into the Beaufort River that is located east of Ribaut Road US Further defined, downtown is broken into five distinct historic neighborhoods: Other residential areas[edit] As the city expanded in the 20th century, additional growth focused on previously undeveloped areas north and west of the historic district. These areas have since become integral parts of the city and today are home to the majority of the residents in the city. The Pigeon Point and Higginsonville neighborhoods are located immediately north of Downtown Beaufort and are built around the Beaufort National Cemetery. They contain two major city parks: An area with smaller homes and mostly one-story early 20th century structures, Pigeon Point has experienced a renewal of development interest, with many homes being "flipped" or renovated in recent years. Higginsonville is more similar in character to the Northwest Quadrant neighborhood and has its street names come from famous abolitionists during the Civil War era. These areas have been the focus of recent redevelopment efforts. Formerly concentrated around the Beaufort rail station the depot , the neighborhoods have similar characteristics to the Pigeon Point area and have a sizable number of military families as residents. The Spanish Point neighborhood is located between Downtown and Mossy Oaks, generally considered to be clustered around the Technical College of the Lowcountry campus and the Beaufort Memorial Hospital. Several upscale residential streets are found in this area. There are some commercial establishments in the area in addition to residential subdivisions ranging from self-contained attached housing to residential estate lots of 0. Most of the incorporated areas are upscale residential communities. Several major shopping centers and dining establishments are prevalent in all three areas. Beyond shopping and dining, Ribaut Road has numerous medical offices clustered near Beaufort Memorial Hospital. Boundary Street and Robert Smalls Parkway have several lodging facilities and auto dealerships as prevailing business types. Boundary Street is expected to change its appearance over the coming years due in part to a major redevelopment plan approved by the city in and supported via tax increment financing. Uptown Beaufort refers to a series of mostly commercial properties along Boundary Street, which separates the historic district from the Pigeon Point neighborhood. Uptown is not formally considered a neighborhood on its own, yet merchants have created a unique identity to market the commercial area separately from downtown merchants clustered on Bay Street. The Marine Corps Air Station Beaufort was annexed into the city in the s, expanding the city limits northward near the unincorporated Seabrook community. Previous attempts at bringing large-scale residential development north of the air station were defeated after protests from long-time citizens and environmental advocacy groups. Media[edit] The Beaufort area has several printed publications. The daily newspaper The Beaufort Gazette is the oldest and most circulated newspaper of record in South Carolina and is the sister publication to the Bluffton-based Island Packet. There are two weekly print newspapers: The Island News and an alternative newsweekly called Lowcountry Weekly. There are five online-only publications, the, Beaufort Online. Several radio stations have transmission feeds originating or duplicating in Beaufort. One such station is WAGP, There are other locations just outside the city, such as Parris Island. Beaufort is part of the Savannah, Georgia Designated Market Area , and additionally receives Charleston television stations. It portrays the evacuation of black slaves from Manhattan by the British after the Revolutionary War, as they had promised freedom to slaves of rebels who joined their forces. The British transported more than 3, freedmen for resettlement to Nova Scotia , where they became known as Black Loyalists ; others were taken to England and the Caribbean. The Book of Negroes is the record of names and origins of freedmen taken to Canada. Beaufort is a tourist destination known for its history. Major festivals and arts events include the Home Water Festival, a two-week festival in the middle of July; and the Shrimp Festival, celebrating the local and traditional industry, in the first weekend in October. The arts[edit] The steeple of the Parish Church of St. The University of South Carolina Beaufort has a performing arts center which attracts regional and national acts to the community. The arts council promotes the arts with original theater productions, community arts grants, and a busy calendar for arts events county-wide. Team activities include football, basketball, baseball, softball, soccer, and cheerleading. Several recreational facilities, including tennis courts, playgrounds, and ballfields exist within the city and in surrounding areas. The local area provides excellent opportunities for watersports and boating. In February , Field and Stream Magazine rated Beaufort as one of the top 20 fishing towns in the United States in an article which factored in cost, attractions, distractions, seasons, and fishing action. Beaufort was also named as a "Top 50 Adventure Town" and the No. The Parish Church of St. Helena, founded in downtown Beaufort in as the established church, is the oldest church in the city. Peter Catholic Church, all with extensive histories and renowned architecture. Jews have been residents of Beaufort and Charleston since the 18th century. Adding to the extensive complement of historic churches in Beaufort is St James Orthodox Church, a mission church of the Orthodox Church in America , and an ancestor of the efforts of 18th century Christian missionaries to America from Russia. Beaufort has several geographic areas of economic activity. The downtown area is the historical center of commerce and is now primarily focused towards visitors, tourists. There are several areas with limited industrial uses that exist primarily in the northwestern sections of the city, close to the intersection of Boundary Street with Robert Smalls Parkway. The largest economic sector in Beaufort is the military presence in and around the community. As a result, economic downturns do not hit the community as hard as in other similarly sized communities. Due in part to its attractive location and deep connections with history and culture, the tourism and hospitality industry is also a major economic sector. Nearly two million visitors a year come to Beaufort and the Sea Islands of northern Beaufort County, with spring and fall seasons being peak times. The primary attractions of these visitors include golf and beach vacations, history, water sports, and local arts and crafts. As a result, Beaufort is home to many accommodation options ranging from upscale bed-and-breakfasts in the downtown area to standard motels and inns along Boundary Street. There are several dozen dining establishments in the city that cater to locals and tourists alike.
