"The Millionairess Across the Street" inspires women to think more powerfully about money and success and to be motivated by confidence, pride, and a belief in their own ability to manage it. Flores and Sander don't use fear of ending up alone or dependent as a motivator.

August 27, John Georges paper mill company was the only one to ask for tariff protection on imported newsprint. University of Illinois On Wednesday, the U. The International Trade Commission in Washington will meet at 11 a. Sold as protection for paper-mill workers, the tariffs were requested by only one Washington state paper factory and its private-equity owner, One Rock Capital, based in New York City. Georges, 87, partner of One Rock Capital, made the case last year to Wilbur Ross, the secretary of commerce and a former private-equity executive. Known on Wall Street as a prominent Greek American financier, Georges is hardly a middle-class worker in need of protectionist tariffs. He and his son Andrew S. Georges both own million-dollar properties. The elder Georges owns a home in Vero Beach, Fla. His home in Greenwich, Conn. The price has been cut several times. Ross earlier this month cut the tariff to Local news publishers want the tariff cut to zero, and argue it hurts American consumers. The damage it is doing to the already fragile state of the economics of newspapers of all sizes across America is severe," said Inquirer and Daily News publisher Terrance C. Toomey on behalf of the newspapers in the commonwealth and encourage them to keep up their efforts," Egger said. According to Pew Research, the newspaper industry was already in the process of layoffs before the tariff. At least 36 percent of the largest newspapers across the United States "as well as at least 23 percent of the highest-traffic digital-native news outlets" experienced layoffs between January and April, according to the Pew study. These were exacerbated by the tariff, put in place in January after One Rock Capital filed its complaint to the Department of Commerce. Newspaper industry groups lobbied Congress and the administration to back off the tariffs, arguing that the measures did more harm than good. For instance, the Tampa Bay Times announced a series of layoffs that the paper said were a direct result of the higher costs from tariffs. August 27, - 4:

Heckles and howls echoed through the meeting rooms of 64 East 4th Street on February 1, Many of their public displays of disagreement took place at 64 East 4th Street, or as it was called then, the Labor Lyceum. From the Lyceum, between and , riots, scandals, and strikes convened and burst forth with near regularity. Whether hosting Mother Jones and her army of labor unionists, a free-for-all fight within the Socialist Labor party , or the hoboes and their warring leaders, 64 East 4th Street hosted assemblies for those who fervently, and fanatically, pushed the vanguard of social and political change. Developers Elisha Peck and Anson Phelps commissioned the construction of the building in as one of the original 12 houses of Albion Place. As early as , newspapers referred to the building as the Metropolitan Assembly Rooms and boarding house. In May of , for example, the New York Tribune reported on a jubilee in the assembly rooms, held by young New Yorkers of color to celebrate the Act of Congress emancipating slaves in the District of Columbia. Starting in the s, laborers, veterans, and socialists also used the rooms for meetings and congregations, including Eads How, who founded the New York chapter of The Brotherhood Welfare Association in September, By the time of this meeting, he had become heir to millions as the grandson of James B. Eads , the man who built the famous Eads bridge over the Mississippi River. As Davis would later explain at a convention of his followers in St. He said to Isabella: The hotels fed, housed and supplied work for the wandering hobo, provided he indeed looked for work. Davis moved onto New York for his next facility in this informal franchise. Jeff Davis, pictured in the newspaper the Day Book, on February 21, Eads How managed to regain his foothold over the hoboes in October when he led the Brotherhood Welfare Association to adopt an anti-militarist stance during World War I. Once again, Eads How put up money so that the Brotherhood Welfare Association could move its headquarters permanently to the Labor Lyceum. The space was unfurnished and some members feared that the venue would then prove insufficient. But furniture or no furniture, we will meet in our new winter quarters. Eads How never made such demands, which is not to say that he discouraged work. As it turned out, unemployed citizens from the United States, the Caribbean, and Costa Rica were among those who contributed to the construction effort. A rumor spread that Davis said Eads How was crazy. The New York Tribune explained that the rumor emanated from a Philadelphia hobo at one of the weekly meetings at the Lyceum. Regardless, Hotel De Gink, located at 75 Center Street now apartment buildings , opened in late January of and Davis threw himself fully into the world of hobodom. The King reigned supreme. As early as , 64 East 4th Street was known as the Socialist Labor Lyceum, too, and was the site of many a ruckus. On the way to a march, she stopped at the headquarters of the Social Democratic party, located at the Lyceum. It is no surprise then, that socialism, and its housing at 64 East 4th Street, would be contentious for the hoboes. He then made a speech, peering over his silver-rimmed glasses, and as the New York Times reported, looked to be all of his 56 years. At his cremation ceremony, the Washington Post reported that only 12 people attended; one of them a hobo. The International Theater Arts Institute. The group carried authorized national membership cards, and numbered upwards of one million people during the Great Depression. The halls fell into devastation during the Depression years and by the s , the building had thoroughly decayed. We call it vanguardia. Meanwhile, in Britt, Iowa, King Ricardo and Queen Sunrise now reign over hobodom, carrying on the same traditions embodied by the King and the Millionaire on 4th Street, fervently embracing the free life of work and wander.
