

Chapter 1 : The mystery of the star ruby (edition) | Open Library

I read The Mystery of the Star Ruby for a project at Waukazoo Elementary. I thought it was a good book because it is a boxcar mystery and the kids are detectives that solve mysteries and they are in the same family.

Violet turned from the front seat of the car. Jessie, who was twelve, knew how Benny felt. Can we go there? Is it a dog made of rocks? They turned off the main highway, following signs that led them from one twisting road to another. Jessie worried they would never find the gem mine or their way out again! At last the thick woods parted to reveal a clearing. A large sign with a giant painted red jewel proclaimed they had arrived at Ruby Hollow. Grandfather followed the driveway into a crowded parking lot. They got out of the car and walked up a flower-lined path to a series of wooden buildings. At the main building, a man in a cowboy hat opened the entrance door and waved them inside. I hope you plan to stay because we have lots to do here. Besides the mine, we have hiking trails, a restaurant, a museum, and a gem-cutting shop. Cecil Knight tapped a poster on the wall in the lobby. It lasts a week. The person who finds the largest ruby by the end of the week wins first place. The pictures showed people holding red or blue stones. Some of the stones were pretty big. And our on-site jeweler will set the stone in the mounting of their choice. Solid gold, of course. The boy in that photo was twelve years old. He found a 1-carat sapphire worth eleven thousand dollars. He wanted to start digging for gems right away. Knight led the way down a short hall. Knotty-pine paneled walls were crowded with more photographs. But these pictures were older, in black and white instead of color. While Grandfather registered, Benny studied a photo of two boys standing by a big wooden wheel. One boy grinned into the camera, but the other slouched with his hands in his pockets, frowning. Once they were checked in, Mr. Knight explained some of the procedures. All our specialty buckets are guaranteed to produce gemstones. There are plenty of stones in this region! If you look carefully, you can actually find rubies along the roads. As they walked back to the car, Grandfather pointed out the two empty cabins. And the one two doors down is Mica. Benny liked the one he was sharing with Henry. It had pine bunk beds and old-fashioned mining lamps hanging on the walls. I want to start looking for rubies. At the end was a booth. Grandfather paid the entry fees to the girl inside. A waterwheel turned wooden paddles, supplying a steady stream of fresh creek water that flowed through a long, V-shaped wooden trough. People lined both sides of the trough, sifting dirt in mesh-screened trays. Near one end of the flume was a stack of mesh-bottomed trays. Grandfather scanned the brochure. The Aldens found places along the flume. People shifted to make room for them. A young man with sandy hair and glasses smiled at Benny. Benny nodded, holding up his tray. My name is Jonathan Merrill. Benny wrinkled his nose. Some of the mud washes down the flume. You have to do this until the water runs clear. So they look like rocks at first. There are displays to help you see what rubies and other gems look like with and without matrix. He held up a black rock. Benny put his sapphire in his pocket. But it is dinnertime. They all turned in their trays and washed up at the old-fashioned outdoor pump. The restaurant was inside the main building. Outside the entrance, the menu was written on a chalkboard. Guests dined family-style at the big pine tables. Jonathan and the Aldens sat down. He popped a hush puppy in his mouth, enjoying the crunchy sweetness of fried cornmeal and onion. Sybil grinned at him. But I keep coming back to Ruby Hollow. A large pinkish rock with red glints tumbled onto his place mat. His napkin fell to the floor. Henry bent down to pick it up, but Donald planted his foot on the red-checked cloth. Knight poured coffee into his cup, Donald took a long time to retrieve his napkin. Let me explain the Ruby Hollow grading system. I use the Three Bears story to make it easy to remember. Any gem under fifteen carats is called a Baby Bear. A Mama Bear gem is fifteen to thirty carats, worth cutting for jewelry. And a Papa Bear is any gem over thirty carats. Just like your weight is measured in pounds. Knight said, moving on to the next table. Violet had been thinking about the Three Bears story. Is there a Goldilocks size of ruby? A brilliant red stone glittered in a ring on her left hand. A star ruby is polished smooth so you can see the rays inside. I think the family had a falling-out sometime after that. But Cecil has been running this mine ever since I can remember. At the same moment, Donald rose from his chair so abruptly he collided with her. Henry jumped up in time to save the tray from crashing to the floor. Jessie was still thinking about the contest.

The "Projections" collection relies on numerous clinical studies to offer a musical support - which has shown itself to be effective - for those who seek to improve their personal well-being. Making this music resonate along with the mental and affective sphere in each person can serve to reveal and activate the subconscious and its driving archetypes. It is therefore particularly recommended for use by psychotherapists and sophrologists However, these sectors of activity are not exhaustive. Finally, teachers of drawing and painters have appreciated it for its stimulating effect on the imagination. We play only my original stuff. I use a synthesizer, acoustic guitar, electric guitar, and all roland recording equipment. My son plays drums and has actually got quite good. I started playing guitar at a early age with my dad. Honky tonk, I think it was. Well when the Beatles came out, it was all over. I was hooked on rock and roll. I sound a lot like John Lennon, not that I could compare myself to him. I plan on doing a cover of working class hero because I sound so much like him on that song. All those who do make it to the top have one thing in common, they understand that there are two elements that make it possible for them to reach the top: Tom Sabella learned the business side of the music industry from the ground
