Additional Information In lieu of an abstract, here is a brief excerpt of the content: For purposes of sharing this information with other professionals , educators throughout the country are encouraged to submit information. The instructions for submission of information follow the reviews. Their response to the dictionary has been very positive, and in light of the many past frustrations and problems that my students bring to the use of a dictionary, I feel encouraged by this. Words here, unlike other dictionaries, are defined not more abstractly , but more concretely. Some 55, words are defined with a "core" vocabulary of some 2, of the most commonly used words in English. Thus, the definitions are "written using simpler terms that the words they describe" Longman, p. Many definitions include example sentences to illustrate proper usage while reinforcing meaning. Many "two word verbs" and idioms are given separate treatment. All of these features are important aids for hearing-impaired students which, to my knowledge, do not exist in most other dictionaries. At this point no objective data exist to support my feeling that this dictionary is a better aid to students than others that are available. My present opinion is based solely on my own experience in using the dictionary and the response that I have had from my students during the years. In addition, I do not feel that this is the only dictionary which hearing-impaired people should be encouraged to buy. Depending on the goals of each student, several different kinds of dictionaries may be necessary to provide students with the fullest possible way of independently acquiring new vocabulary. My plans are to continue using the Longman Dictionary on an optional basis. If students continue to tell me that it helps them more than other dictionaries, then I will probably make it a required text. If you have any questions or would like to discuss this dictionary with me, please feel free to call me at NTID. I would appreciate hearing any positive or negative comments about the dictionary from you or your students.
