As a result, the family moved many times. This was ultimately corrected by two operations. She also suffered from kidney dysfunction. Moore and Guynes briefly reconciled shortly before Guynes died of cancer in July at age 30. Moore also appeared on the cover of the January issue of the adult magazine Oui, [28] taken from a photo session in which she had posed nude. Interviewer Alan Carter said, "However, some peekaboo shots did appear inside. It was just the cover. During her tenure on the series, she made an uncredited cameo appearance in the spoof film Young Doctors in Love. Its screenwriter, Nancy Savoca, directed two segments, including one in which Moore played a widowed nurse in the early 1980s seeking a back-alley abortion. Jane, Moore retreated from the spotlight and moved to Hailey, Idaho, on a full-time basis to devote herself to raising her three daughters. Her performance as a woman with multiple personality disorder was well received, [62] [63] but the film itself garnered mixed reviews and was deemed "naggingly slow" by some critics. Her unsmiling sexiness cuts through the gigglefest as the angels fight, kick, dance and motocross like Indiana Jones clones on estrogen". In the interim, Moore signed on as the face of the Versace fashion brand [67] and the Helena Rubinstein brand of cosmetics. Brooks, with Kevin Costner. The New York Times found her performance to be "the most wooden" of her career, writing: While the film found a limited release in theaters, [74] Moore received positive reviews from critics; Miami Herald wrote: Brooks, Moore has since acted mainly in independent films. In 1991, Moore took on the role of a daughter helping her father deal with age-related health problems in the dramedy Happy Tears, opposite Parker Posey and Rip Torn, and starred as the matriarch of a family moving into a suburban neighborhood in the comedy The Joneses, with David Duchovny. The latter film was largely highlighted upon its theatrical release, with critics concluding that it "benefits from its timely satire of consumer culture" as well as a pair of strong performances" from Duchovny and Moore. In February 1992, Moore joined the cast of Empire, in the recurring role of a take-charge nurse with a mysterious past. Her first widely released film since Mr. Brooks, Rough Night was a moderate commercial success. Annie Leibovitz shot the picture while Moore was seven months pregnant with the second of her three daughters, Scout LaRue Willis, intending to portray "anti-Hollywood, anti-glitz" attitude. The teaser said "Due this March. The pair planned to marry in December, but called off the engagement. Rumer born August 16, 1992, Scout born July 20, 1993, and Tallulah born February 3, 1994. These districts have chosen a variety of exemptions and innovations with some common themes. How do these exemptions affect school board policy and district operations? The goal is to retain these top performing employees. Participants will hear the process and experience CISD went through while building a strategic plan for retaining its top employees. Presenters will provide an overview of issues to consider as session approaches and how to use that information to advocate on behalf of school districts and affect positive change within education policy. Attendees may share stories of their advocacy efforts and any pertinent information regarding legislative issues. Increasing efforts to privatize public education originate from an image that is poorly held by the public. What emerged were five different positions to either support or reject the hypothesis. During this presentation, teams will reveal their findings. Public Education Highlights 9: Our re-designed processes enable community voice to drive critical decisions including new school boundaries, development of bond packages, and creating the annual school calendar. Explore processes that enable critical board decisions to be made while avoiding controversy and community push back. Learn practical methods to engage your community in decision-making without letting a small vocal group take control of the process. Join a TASB policy consultant in a discussion about mandates, policy decisions and priorities for your school health program. This session is not a repeat from 8: Your Data Working for You! By combining disparate data with demographic and program information, the leadership team is able to analyze and communicate their situation effectively. Teacher Recruitment and Retention 15 Shawn Mason, Superintendent, Crosbyton CISD See programs that have been effective in developing and retaining teachers in a small, rural district, and acquire strategies for growing your own teachers. This presentation will detail multiple avenues for the development of teacher candidates that are willing to serve a rural school district, and it will include strategies to help retain teachers in the district once they are hired. During this session, we will role play different learning approaches, give examples of traditional versus Montessori learning, and discuss the pitfalls and barriers students and districts face in having access to these programs. Sessions in the Exhibit Hall This session will provide an overview of creating safe schools by creating positive, safe and comfortable school environments benefiting the mental health of students and staff. Processes will also be outlined for working with first responders in the design of school campuses. Public Education Highlights Learn how to set up community partnerships that sustain due to an explicitly designed structure with tremendous community and school district support. Update on Religion in Schools 13AB Joy Baskin, Director of Legal Services, TASB Texas school officials often find themselves caught between those who wish to express religious views at school and those who would prefer to eliminate religious expression from the school environment. These challenges are not limited to Texas, of course, and we can learn from cases from other states. This presentation by a TASB Legal Services attorney looks at four recent lawsuits about religion in schools to provide guidance to Texas school officials. This session is not repeated at Learn how to effectively influence legislation using proven strategies for establishing and leveraging relationships with lawmakers to improve public education in Texas. Friday Activities School Safety: During the spring of , an inclusive process was used to vet and bring ideas for consideration. Hear the process Mansfield ISD used to create their plan and determine priorities for school safety. Participants will engage in activities designed to connect positive culture to increased student outcomes. Specific examples that are easily implemented into any district culture will be given. Learn how the heart and soul of MISD was shared with families and community to become one mind with one goal From Struggle to Soar: To thrive in this new era, students need to know how to learn, problem solve, iterate, create, collaborate, communicate, and to think critically. Beginning this journey has helped us realize our most struggling students are more engaged in authentic ways. Experience a PBL, and see how this model engages students in deep learning. Share practices for improving board and superintendent partnerships and explore how to develop plans for district improvement. By breaking PR into four manageable categories, a veteran school public relations professional shares his secrets of success in a session that will let you relax, interact, laugh, and learn. Communication of district needs with city officials can be a challenge, but a quarterly meeting will help district officials develop an ongoing partnership with those who make decisions for the community. Participants will be encouraged to ask questions about the search process. Ysleta ISD experienced a renaissance by building a successful bond with the community. A team consisting of the superintendent, administrators, program managers, and community members was assembled to address the complexities of an established district with seven distinct feeder patterns. School facilities in smaller rural districts that were once designed traditionally are now giving way to a more innovative and engaging educational environment. This presentation will explore simple design techniques that compliment curriculum based instruction that ultimately promotes student-driven learning. Tools for Implementing Board Policy Friday Activities School Leaders must be proactive in supporting school and community efforts to prepare for, respond to, and recover from incidents and emergencies that may impact their district. This workshop empowers school leaders to identify their roles and responsibilities within the realm of school safety and emergency management, provides a forum to discuss executive-level considerations related to disaster preparedness, and shares best practices for school safety and emergency management. Join a TASB policy consultant as we discuss practical strategies for developing and revising administrative regulations to implement policy. This interactive session will provide attendees an opportunity to navigate an actual policy and identify the provisions needing detailed action steps. Participants will explore how a school district can simplify the strategic planning process, engage the community and streamline the scope of work. Hear how Midway ISD utilized a process to develop goals while engaging the community to plan for the future. Richard Schellhammer, Shareholder, Underwood Law Firm Discussion panel of lawyers who have handled over construction projects bring their experiences to the table in making recommended construction contract modifications to the revised AIA contract forms issued in Learn favorable legal provisions for your construction contracts, review school district modifications to AIA contracts, and avoid provisions that favor architects and general contractors. Participants will also be provided opinions regarding trends and UIL competition. Opportunities for asking questions and providing input to UIL will also be offered. With it, nothing can fail. Without it, nothing can succeed. Using effective communication and psychology strategies, school administrators can foster the advocacy needed to move important measures forward. In this session you will learn some quick strategies to understand and work with difficult people. But how far is too far? Can students be disciplined for refusing to stand for the pledge or national anthem? This session is not a repeat from Engage in an open discussion about the safety and security issues happening in schools today. What are some of the findings of these recent events, and what are school districts doing to help prevent an occurrence in their district? Architects who exclusively design learning environments will share design strategies, new building products focused on safety and security, and reactive strategies that are most likely missing the mark.

I hope everyone enjoyed this July 4th as much as I did. Can you remember a Fourth as cool as this year? Seasons are a time of change: Each season requires preparation for the next. With each season comes the glorious change. As the summer season arrives, farmers make changes just like the season changes. This past fall, we over-seeded bermuda pastures with rye grass, while some farmers may have used wheat, rye or oats. In July, the small grains are not producing, or they have been harvested for hay, balage or grazed by the cattle all winter and spring. As summer arrives, we are fertilizing the bermuda fields, preparing for cutting and baling hay to be utilized for winter feeding, and pregnant cows are grazing 4 adding to their condition after weaning calves. This prepares those cows for the next season. Fescue pastures have been clipped as they have slowed in growth, but soon we will be making plans for their utilization in the fall. I feel we live in a great location because the two forages 4 bermuda and fescue 4 complement each other, although sometimes I think it may be easier to manage just one. Timing is critical for planting, fertilizing or harvesting for maximum production. A strategy preparing and utilizing forages for the next season is critical for successful management. This time of year also brings about harvest for farms and gardens that were planted way back in February, March or April, depending on where you live in the state. Growing up, we always had some type of garden. While I remember the garden, I do not remember many of the details in preparing the garden. Today that is much different. When Leslie and I married in April , I was reintroduced to gardening but much more labor was involved than I remember. Leslie reminded me that we planted an early and a late garden that year. When sweet corn was ready, it was all hands on deck: Today our garden is not quite that large. Bradley my brother-in-law lays out the rows for planting and does most of the planting of the corn, peas and okra. We all join in to plant tomatoes, squash, green beans, peppers, cucumbers and whatever other seeds Leslie has purchased or saved for the year. This year we are harvesting some for the first time. If we plant too early, the cool nights will kill the tender plants and require replanting. One season comes along in preparation for the next season. We will be holding our Region RoundUps throughout the state. Our Regional Vice Presidents lead the charge on setting up these events. The Region RoundUps are great opportunities to share ideas with other associations about how your association has been successful. As a leader in your association, you may be able to take home some new ideas for meetings, field days, and beef month promotions for the next season. I recently set up a meeting for March , so planning for future events can be planted now for future harvest. Please consider attending a Region RoundUp in your area. I look forward to seeing you there. Be looking for opportunities to support the Georgia CattleWomen, as they will be raising funds for Cattle Drive for Hunger. They are always getting prepared for the next season. Please reach out to them or me if we can be of assistance. Thank you and God Bless. Producers cattle auction www. The Region RoundUp series has been set. All meetings will begin at 6 p. The RoundUp meetings are a great opportunity to visit with other chapters in your area, provide valuable input to GCA leadership and learn something new. Representation from each chapter in the state is requested to help lay the groundwork for the coming year. We hope to see representatives from all of your chapters during these meetings. As I write this article, the current forecast for the upcoming week reads much like my report card never did: I remember having those thoughts as a kid for a few short days at the beginning of summer. So much promise of days by the pool and floats down the Flint River with friends. Those dreams were usually shattered by the third or fourth day of summer for us Bentley brothers. My Dad was and still is famous for not so quietly coming up the stairs to our bedrooms at some unnatural hour of the morning to ask if we had time to help him that day. He would need cannons and rifles to make his boots sound any louder. After throwing on a pair of jeans and our boots, it seemed like Dad would march his new recruits straight out to the truck " right past the cool clear waters of that pool that I had been dreaming of. I came to realize that the only times we would be swimming in that pool were on Sundays, holidays or at nighttime. Those all-important teenage years of working on my tan were never truly nurtured as I thought was necessary. What Dad always knew, and was trying to teach us, is that summertime is not the time to take it easy. The things that are done during the summer are the things that can make or break your operation. My folks seemed to think it was important to teach their children life lessons through work on the farm, where we would have preferred to learn those through conversations by the pool. Those lessons learned serve me well at GCA. It would be easy for us here in the office to think of summer as a time to catch up after the busy time in the spring with the legislative session, our annual Convention and Beef Expo. We know that these summer days are vitally important to the business of the Association. The committee meetings that go on at the GCA Summer Conference are much like hay season for producers. They are where all of the policy and business decisions that will guide the Association for the upcoming year are made.

Foreword, by Mary John. Young Children as People. Methods and Levels of Involving Young Children. Consulting Young Children and Taking Risks. Sharing Decisions and Responsibility. The Key Messages from the Evidence and Experience. Praise for the first edition: It gives practical suggestions as to different approaches adults can take to consulting with young children and also includes some brief case studies of good practice. These highlight the case that we all too often underestimate the potential children have to act as socially responsible citizens, whether through a genuine lack of understanding of what children are capable of, or through an anxiety about a loss of control. She stresses that we need to teach children that sometimes they have a choice, but at other times there is no choice. She offers arguments both for and against young children being consulted in matters which affect them. The book gives clear suggestions of how to deal with possible barriers put up by adults who feel they should be the decision makers. All this provides interesting reading and the basis for a good discussion. It made me think about the school councils I have sat on: She makes the grounds and nature of these often-inarticulate qualms clear, and is equally clear that children should not have to bear the burden of problems that adults have with their adulthood. This book will prove invaluable to any who are involved in research or professional practice with children. It is also carefully and quietly making "child-citizens" thinkable. A final commendation is that it takes the "tough" cases of young children and babies as its primary focus and still makes a very reasonable and compelling case for their abilities to participate in decision-making. Alderson discusses the importance of treating young children as individuals and as holders of rights. It contributes to the canon of work illustrating why consulting with children is so important in reaching good solutions for them. The author suggests that, in the belief we are looking after their best interests, we have become overprotective of children and deny them the freedom to be expressive, creative and active, and that improving the way adults and children communicate is the best way of redressing that balance. It will be of interest to anyone who works with young children. Other titles on themes relating to children can be found on our working with children and child psychiatry and psychology pages. She has worked in the field of disability rehabilitation and independent living and has researched with minority rights groups. Sexual Offending and Mental Health Edition:
