Any concerns Phil Hoard had about breaking the color barrier at Church Hill in when integration brought changes to the high school level were eased by the friendly reception he got from students. I always figured the Lord had a thing for me to be a go-between. The cheerleaders greeted me wanting to know which sport I played. The transfer to Church Hill cut his travel to 10 miles. Hoard, a 6-foot, pound guard, averaged 33 points a game as a sophomore basketball player at Swift, going against the likes of Johnson City Langston standouts Kenny Hamilton and Johnny Russaw. This came on the heels of his 17 per game clip as a freshman. His shooting range was 22 to 25 feet. He blazed in 54 points in a game against Dante, Va. Five times he scored more than Hoard sat on the bench a lot in the first 11 games before coach Oran Blackburn decided it was time for him to play. The Panthers lost their first seven contests, won the next seven and finished with a respectable record. The team scoring was more balanced than it had been at Swift. Hoard, also a dominant rebounder, averaged 12 points as a junior and 13 as a senior. Hoard was a utility player on the football squad. He had been a backfield starter on the Swift varsity as an eighth-grader. They tried to start the program back up in but never got it off the ground. Nobody had the will to play again. Hoard had been a terror in the youth leagues, sometimes pitching doubleheaders. At age 14, he appeared in three games on the same day during a tournament at Morristown, winning two and saving another. He played Hoard at eight different positions. In a win over Rogersville, Hoard drove in eight runs despite a disputed call on a home run that was ruled foul. Pitching was his forte. Accurate radar guns were still a thing of the future but it was estimated that his fastball occasionally reached 90 mph. Church Hill won those games and He managed to shoot a few rounds with Hamilton, Russaw, Tommy Woods and Bill Wilson before his plans changed abruptly. During a month tour of duty in Vietnam, Hoard was exposed to Agent Orange and still has health issues because of it. Hoard, who completed an apprenticeship in maintenance at Eastman Chemical Co. Discovery[ edit ] The find was made under very unfortunate circumstances. The finder was metal-detecting without the knowledge and permission of the owners of the site, which had recently been cleared for building work, and made his discovery late on a November day, in failing light. He recovered the material in great haste, probably overlooking some small items, and because he knew he had no legal right to search in that area, he did not, as the law requires, report his discovery to the authorities. Instead, he unwisely attempted to sell the objects he had found to private buyers. By the time archaeologists learned of the find several months later, the findspot had been built over, making proper archaeological investigation impossible. It was not even possible to question the finder about the circumstances, because by the time the material arrived at the British Museum for study, he was terminally ill, and he died about a month later, in July Persistent rumours that the treasure originally included coins have never been confirmed or convincingly rejected, but even if there were no coins, it is quite likely that the group as we see it now is incomplete. The full account of the circumstances of the discovery is related in the standard catalogue. Silver objects[ edit ] The silver tableware in the hoard comprises three strainers and 33 spoons, of two types. Many of the spoons bear pagan inscriptions to Faunus , a minor Roman god who had many characteristics in common with the Greek Pan. There is no overtly Christian symbolism in the hoard, though one spoon is decorated with the figure of a fish , which can often be an oblique reference to Christianity. Nevertheless, at this date, the end of the 4th century AD, there was no obstacle to placing unequivocally Christian symbols and inscriptions on personal possessions, so that their absence here is noteworthy. The openly, and probably exclusively, pagan iconography remains one of the most interesting and unusual aspects of the assemblage. The epithets or by-names applied to Faunus in the inscriptions have been identified as containing Celtic Gaulish or British linguistic elements, supporting the supposition that any cult of Faunus which they represent was Romano-British, not one that consisted of devotees from elsewhere in the Roman Empire. The inscriptions were discussed in the published catalogue by the late Kenneth Jackson. However, since both pagan and Christian inscriptions are regularly found on Roman jewellery and domestic tableware, and as the actual motivation for the concealment of the Thetford material itself is unknown, this view is open to debate. The unusual composition of the group of gold objects is actually somewhat better evidence of a non-domestic background than the decoration and inscriptions of the silver assemblage see comments on the range of finger-rings in the following section. The suspicion that the hoard is incomplete undermines any detailed analysis of these matters, but if the gold and silver objects were connected in any way with pagan cult practices, which is certainly a possibility, then the anti-pagan Theodosian edicts of the s would have provided good practical rather than ritual reasons for the concealment of the material from the authorities. The gold belt-buckle is an unusual find, and would have been worn by a man; [7] we know that belts decorated in various forms were important symbols of office or status in late Roman times, though few elements of them have survived. The rings from the hoard The gold finger-rings could have been worn by either men or women, [10] though the bracelets, and necklaces with pendants were chiefly feminine jewels at this date. Many of the rings display elaborate filigree work, typical of late-Roman taste, and a few are of highly unusual design. The birds, even though they are at a very small scale, have the appearance of woodpeckers, and picus, the Latin name for birds of this kind, was also the name of the father of Faunus in some sources Virgil, Aeneid 7, Much of the jewellery will have been designed and selected for its talismanic , religious or personal significance. A gold amulet pendant, intended for suspension around the neck and with parallels including one from York , was filled with sulphur , possibly because of its apotropaic qualities. It has been suggested that all the objects "may well have been commissioned by a group of intellectuals who fervently believed in the old values and who interred the objects when serious persecution of non-Christians began in the s". This pristine condition is one of the unusual features of the Thetford jewellery assemblage. It would be somewhat surprising for a single owner, or even a family, to possess such a comparatively large number of rings which seem to have been acquired from a single source at the same time. Personal collections of jewellery usually contain pieces of different ages and conditions. Significance[ edit ] The Thetford assemblage, in spite of the sadly inadequate details of its discovery and provenance, remains one of the most intriguing and unusual of the many late-Roman precious-metal hoards from Britain. Although the combination of silver tableware and gold personal ornament with or without coins is common enough in precious-metal hoards of this period from Britain, the fact that the inscriptions, supported by the visual imagery, allude to pagan, rather than Christian, belief towards the end of the 4th century, is important. Attempts have been made to interpret the hoard as Christian, [18] but remain somewhat unconvincing when applied to objects current at a period when paganism, rather than Christianity, was out of favour. In the present state of knowledge, we can still only speculate about the status of the objects, that is, whether they belonged to an individual or family, or to some organisation, such as a religious one.

With a victory vs. Baltimore last week, Cincinnati already has a head-to-head win over the second-place Ravens and stands a game and a half ahead of the Pittsburgh Steelers and the Cleveland Browns each are The Bengals this week are positioned in stark contrast to where they stood after two games a year ago, when they were and struggling offensively. Last season after an start, they were ranked last in the NFL in scoring with just nine total points and had yet to score a touchdown. The poor start on offense last year prompted the team to make a change at offensive coordinator, promoting quarterbacks coach Bill Lazor into that role prior to the third contest. Unfortunately, we had to make some changes that were hard to make, and we have moved forward from there. I think the changes we made in the offseason this year have continued to move us in a positive direction. Not only did Lazor have the opportunity to install his own offensive system throughout the offseason, but Lewis also welcomed six new coaches to his staff this year. We are checking those boxes, so we feel pretty good about things. Cincinnati has scored 34 points in each of its first two games. That marks the first time in team history the Bengals have scored at least 34 points in each of their first two contests. In addition, their 68 total points is the second highest point total after the first two games of a season in team history, behind only the 72 points scored over Games in And on defense, the Bengals have five takeaways in their first two contests, already more than a third of their total of Dalton has completed Green, who had a career-high three TD catches last week vs. Baltimore, has 11 receptions for yards and four TDs. Dunlap has one sack, and his four passes defended are the most in the NFL for a non-defensive back. In their most recent visit to Carolina, the Bengals recorded a win, in Five teams are tied for the second fewest number of matchups against the Bengals at 11 – the Arizona Cardinals, the Chicago Bears, the N. That number will drop to four teams after Week 8 this season, when the Bengals host the Buccaneers. Thus, if one was to count regular-season games only, the Bengals-Texans series has the second fewest number of matchups with The franchise with next-fewest number of visits by the Bengals is the Arizona Cardinals. Howard captured 85 percent of the first-place votes in balloting for the Heisman, the largest margin in history at that time. In , he was inducted into the College Football Hall of Fame [1] and he was honored as the inaugural Michigan Football Legend, a program honoring former players equivalent to a retired jersey number. He met with Michigan counselor Greg Harden, who helped him to build his confidence and achieve success on and off the field. After scoring in the game, in the end zone he wanted to do a backflip but, Howard later said, "chickened out"; instead he imitated the pose of the football player on the Heisman trophy, immediately receiving much media attention. Howard later said that "all of a sudden, everyone was doing it"; many have imitated the act, including fellow athletes, celebrities, and Presidents George W. Bush and Barack Obama. The Redskins, worried that the Green Bay Packers were going to draft Howard in the fifth spot, leapfrogged above them by dealing their two first-round picks - 6th and 28th - and their third-round choice 84th to the Cincinnati Bengals for their first-round pick 4th and their third-round pick 58th. Though he recorded 92 receptions in his first four seasons, he excelled as a punt and kickoff returner throughout his career. This is known as a specialist. Howard played one season with the Jacksonville Jaguars in , having been selected in the NFL expansion draft with the 55th pick. He had 26 receptions and one touchdown, with 10 kick returns. His most notable professional season was in for the Green Bay Packers. He led the NFL in punt returns 58, punt return yards, punt return average. His punt return yards were an NFL record, easily surpassing the old record of yards set by Fulton Walker in . But [Howard] made the big play. That return was the game right there. His performance won him the Super Bowl MVP award, making Howard the only player to ever win the award based solely on a special teams performance. Howard became a free agent after the season and signed with the Oakland Raiders. He led the NFL in kickoff returns 61 and kickoff return yards 1, Howard spent the football season with the Raiders before re-joining the Packers in . In the middle of the season, Howard was cut by the Packers after subpar performance and multiple injuries. In a special homecoming, he scored a special teams touchdown in his Lions debut. He also scored 16 touchdowns 7 receiving, 8 punt returns, 1 kickoff return. Overall, Howard gained 12, all-purpose yards in his professional career.
