Vodka, folk rock and secobarbital: Aaron McQ says the hardest decision was exactly when to die. The year-old Seattle man -- a former world traveler, triathlete and cyclist -- learned he had leukemia five years ago, followed by an even grimmer diagnosis in An interior and urban designer who legally changed his given name, McQ had been in pain and physical decline for years. Then the disease threatened to shut down his ability to swallow and breathe. The practice, approved in seven states and the District of Columbia, allows people with a projected six months or less to live to obtain lethal drugs to end their lives. Read More Although the option was legal, actually carrying it out was difficult for McQ, who agreed to discuss his deliberations with Kaiser Health News. He said he hoped to shed light on an often secretive and misunderstood practice. More than 3, people in the U. Even as similar statutes have expanded to more venues -- including, this year, Hawaii -- it has remained controversial. Supporters say the practice gives patients control over their own fate in the face of a terminal illness. Detractors -- including religious groups, disability rights advocates and some doctors -- argue that such laws could put pressure on vulnerable people and that proper palliative care can ease end-of-life suffering. Last November, doctors told McQ he had six months or less to live. The choice, he said, became not death over a healthy life, but a "certain outcome" now over a prolonged, painful -- and "unknowable" -- end. And I would rather have it not be a surprise. For weeks, the bottle holding the lethal dose sat on a shelf in his kitchen. At the time, he intended to take the drug in late February. Then his sister and her family came for a visit. Many people who opt for medical aid-in-dying are so sick that they take the drugs as soon as they can, impatiently enduring state-mandated waiting periods to obtain the prescriptions Data from Oregon show that the median time from first request to death is 48 days, or about seven weeks. But it has ranged from two weeks to more than 2. Neurodegenerative diseases like ALS are particularly difficult, said Dr. Lonny Shavelson, a Berkeley, Calif. When do you decide? He was the final caregiver for his grandmother, Milly, who he said begged for death to end pain at the end of her life. He was admitted to home hospice care, but continued to decline. McQ considered several dates -- and then changed his mind, partly because of the pressure that such a choice imposed. Along with the pain, the risk of losing the physical ability to administer the medication himself, a legal requirement, was growing. Finally, McQ chose the day: Robinson came over early in the afternoon, as she had often done, to drink coffee and talk -- but not about his impending death. DeRoche arrived exactly at 5: Four close friends gathered, along with Robinson. Then she mixed the drug with coconut water and some vodka. Just then, McQ started to cry, DeRoche said. McQ asked everyone but DeRoche to leave the room. She told him he could still change his mind. McQ drank half the drug mixture, paused and drank water. Then he swallowed the rest. His friends returned, but remained silent. Very quickly, just before 7: I think we were all a little surprised he was gone that fast. He was driving away, listening to jazz. It was probably what he expected, she said, but not anything that he desired.

The number of paperboys has declined dramatically in recent years. This is due partly to the disappearance of afternoon newspapers, whose delivery times worked better for school-aged children than did those of morning papers, which were typically delivered before 6 a.m.

Plot[edit] Anita, the chain-smoking maid of the Jansen family, recounts to an unseen reporter the events of the summer of , when idealistic reporter Ward Jansen came back to his hometown of Lately in Moat County, Florida, to investigate the events surrounding a murder in an effort to exonerate a man on death row, Hillary Van Wetter. In , swamp-dwelling alligator hunter and small-time criminal Van Wetter was jailed for the murder of a violent and unscrupulous local sheriff, Thurmond Call. Four years later, Charlotte Bless, a woman from Mobile, Alabama , whom Van Wetter has never met but who has fallen in love with him after exchanging correspondence, is now determined to prove his innocence and have him released so they can marry. Charlotte requested the help of Ward and his colleague, Englishman Yardley Acheman, who are both investigative reporters from The Miami Times. Ward has mixed feelings about returning home to his estranged father, who runs a local newspaper and distributes The Miami Times in their town. His only real friend is Anita, who brought him and Ward up after their mother left them. The evidence against Van Wetter is inconsistent and Ward and Yardley are confident they can expose Van Wetter as a victim of redneck justice. Meanwhile, Jack has fallen in love with Charlotte, who only desires Van Wetter. During a day at the beach, Jack gets stung by a jellyfish and has a life-threatening allergic reaction. Charlotte saves his life by urinating on him, an embarrassing circumstance that his father promptly exploits for an article in his newspaper. Anita suggests that Jack can never stop thinking of Charlotte as she is his first true love. Van Wetter is hostile to the reporters at first, and contrary to the romantic portrayal he had painted of himself in his letters to Charlotte, he reveals himself to be a racist, a sexist and, in general, rude. In the meantime, Yardley and Charlotte have visited the golf course to verify that side of the story; Yardley comes back claiming to have tracked the developer who bought the sod stolen by Hillary and Tyree, but the man only agreed to talk upon a guarantee of anonymity, so Yardley refuses to disclose his name even to Ward. Satisfied with his findings, Yardley goes back to Miami to start writing the article. During the trip, Ward gets drunk, approaches two black men in a bar, and takes them to his motel room. As Ward is taken to the hospital, Jack does not resent him for secretly being a homosexual or for "what he was into", but just for keeping from him this side of his adult life. After the article is published, Van Wetter obtains a pardon and is released from prison, and Yardley leaves for New York with a deal to write a book on the Van Wetter case. Van Wetter takes Charlotte away to the swamp to live with him. However, Jack only finds out about the letter one month later, on the very day of the wedding, when Anita, who has been fired from the Jansen household, gives the letter to him and reveals Ellen decided to hide it from Jack. Since Charlotte is not there, a worried Jack leaves the party to go find her, followed by Ward, who has lost an eye due to the incident at Ormond Beach and is now an alcoholic. When Jack and Ward confront Van Wetter, Charlotte has already been killed after Van Watter refused to let her leave to attend the wedding.
