The final page reveals that the "perfect little baby monster was smiling!" This amusing story is accompanied by cartoonlike illustrations "created in ink and colored in Photoshop." The monsters have a bearlike appearance, and Baby Monster is almost adorable despite his horrible little scowl.

Sep 22, Yamna Rashid rated it really liked it Recommends it for: Every Horror Genre Fan Note: D This book is a collection of stories that follow the theme of horror-thriller or violence depends how you look at it Perfect Little Monsters This is the first story and probably my favourite closely followed by Meat. The protagonist is a young girl who lives out in the middle of nowhere on a farm with her Pops and brother. And then proceeds to tell her young heroine she will soon have a sister to play with. Amy Cross puts her own little twist, adding graphic scenes of violence to keep you at the edge of your seat. And the heroine herself has gone through a rough ordeal as well that has left scars. I Hate You What would you do if someone saw you for the person you are called you out on it? What would you do if you must atone for your sins? Amy Cross took her take on the concept and feeling of hatred in this short story where the heroine must realize the true meaning of literally hating someone to their very core. Through a very shaking experience that will left her changed forever, the heroine will realize she has the concept of hatred all wrong. And what is more damaging than someone coming into your life and changing your way of thinking forever? Meat This one was by far the most graphic and disgusting although in a good way, if that exists. An old woman lives in a pristine home in a well-off suburb. Her husband has passed away and she is apprehensive of her new neighbours. She is also a meat lover to her core. To her very core. She knows there is something wrong with them; she can feel it. So while chewing on an endless supply of juicy meat and steaks, our protagonist evaluates the people next door, crossing all kinds of boundaries, all the while experiencing strange pain all over her body. You would feel chilly as you read on when it is revealed her husband may have been killed. And she ran out of meat months ago and it seems weird she is still procuring a fresh supply every hour. Oh and her house? Fifty Fifty This was more of a take on maths and statistics, precisely how many rounds it would take in a revolver loaded with three bullets to kill you. Whoever gets the bullet of course dies. Until one day, one woman ends up winning three days in a row. The governor is going mad; no one has ever lasted so long. A writer has just tucked his daughter in and has bade his wife goodnight. He intends to write the next part of his book well into the night. Until an old friend knocks at his door more like his window but that was the least disturbing scene in the story. Morning comes and well. Read on to find out. The Scream A town in a corner of the states wakes up to a blood-curdling scream. And a girl they all know very well. For a moment, he feels as if some corner of the universe has been peeled back, and that the scream is a sign of how things really work. Over the next twenty-four hours, the citizens must find the screaming girl, or they will all go mad from the noise. More chilling yet is the fact that it appears to be nowhere in the town and it also seems to be coming from everywhere at once. A strange man has also appeared in the town out of nowhere, claiming he is just passing through. But the citizens soon realize the man may have an ulterior motive. Amidst the scream that can render any sane person crazy within a few hours, some psychopathic tendencies appear in some of the people, especially those trying to imagine what would make the girl scream so loud for hours on end without any break. Most importantly, when they DO find the girl a big if here , would she be in sound condition to survive? Painted in a grisly colour sure to make any reader uneasy, Amy Cross surprises the readers with her very detailed knowledge on the various forms of torture. Some scenes would definitely sate the gore-hungry souls of the SAW franchise and other torture movie fans. The ending left me reeling with more questions yet completely satisfied. To conclude, while each story is formed around torture or a variant of it, all the characters are different and diverse, making you eager to move on to the next tale with a ravenous zeal.

Lostinthemindscape Lucinda Quinzel has had a good life. Living with her Aunt Marilyn has provided her with great privilege, but as she gets older it gets harder to ignore the growing similarities between her and the criminal clown couple that keeps making headline news. I could get it done. Never mind that if it was attached in the wrong place, it could potentially blow up in my face. But those were minor details. The alarm I had set up in the hallway would give me at best six seconds to hide everything. The lock would give me an extra two, provided Aunt Marilyn forgot which way to turn the key, which I hoped she did. I let her keep the key, to let her believe that she had some control over me. But still, I had to pick between hiding my device and hiding the C4. My phone binged as if I had gotten a text, but it was the programmed alarm. Quickly I threw all of screwdrivers and pliers into my purple toolbox, before taking the package of C4 and sliding it into the false bottom of my desk drawer. I stood up as I heard the my door click. Aunt Marilyn walked through the door and I closed my drawer shut with my finger tips. She had gotten better at this. I made a mental reminder to place the trip wire farther up the hallway tonight. You left your clothes in the dryer so I folded them. Had she found it? I quickly snapped back into being cheerful. Aunt Marilyn would eventually get what was coming to her. It might take a while, but eventually she would be sorry that she ever laughed at me. Everything about me was intended to throw people off. Not to mention the fact that I was a ballerina and a gymnast, which were both considered non-violent sports. She frowned when she looked at my desk. I make a robot that blows up without being detonated one time and suddenly everything is a potential weapon. I made my cousin one for Christmas, no C4 at all. But that was the only non-explosive one. Sighing, I placed the car in a plastic container with all of my other devices, each detonator color coded with its explosive. After the box was stowed safely away, I grabbed my phone and walked down the hallway into the kitchen. When I did, I practically choked on my drink. Why the hell was Bruce Wayne in our kitchen? And of course, happy reading! Mama did you know this?! A quick glance at the Joker betrayed the little ticks that only Harley knew. He was going to snap soon. She felt her bones constricting. Lucy spun wildly towards Harley, picking up on this fact. You shot that cameraman just two days ago. Takes after her old man, eh Harls? George had a shotgun brandished, Marilyn with the biggest knife in the block. But that would just make explaining things that much harder to Lucy. Harley lunged at the same time, causing the teenager to fall and stumble. In slow motion, Harley watched Lucy trip and knock her back against the table, drawing the hand with the knife back against her cheek. There was a ripping sound and suddenly red was blossoming down her face. A shot resounded, filling the house with the sound of gunfire. Harley stood there, gun hand shaking while Lucy screamed in pain on the floor. He broke the brittle glass with a thrown chair, dragging the harlequin behind him towards the motorcycle. The neighbors were already awake and GCPD cars were rolling in. The Batsymbol was already up. The duo sped away from the community, hightailed by two cop cars.
