Chapter 1 : Charlie's Blog: PRINT--The Politically Incorrect Guide to Catholicism by John Zmirak

"The Politically Incorrect Guide(R) to Catholicism envelops its deep learning in a breezy Chestertonian style that entertains as it informs. It offers a wry combination of the hilarious and the profound: truth delivered with razor wit.

Still available at a price you can afford--FREE!! He might as well be picking stocks or rewriting the scores of Broadway musicals, for which he has equal divine authority: I was drinking deep from the Catholic fountain, but there is a difference between drinking and drowning. John Zmirak kept me from drowning. I will now elaborate. As a Catholic, I believe that the Roman Catholic Church speaks authoritatively on matters of faith and morals. The Church does not err in this regard though some priests and bishops do their damndest to change this to the peril of their immortal souls. The Guide clarifies the limits of this teaching authority and declares what the Catholic Church actually teaches. My interior struggle came as a result of reading Hilaire Belloc and G. Both of these men were fine writers and fine Catholics. But they did err in believing the Catholic Church taught more than what it taught or should have taught. Then, Chesterton and Belloc attempted to make this the case with their disastrous theories about Distributism. For both of them, Distributism never left the page as neither abandoned writing to go live in the shire tending crops. Their only argument is that we should abandon capitalism for distributism because the Catholic Church teaches this. The Acton people believe in capitalism as found in Smith, Mises, and Hayek but informed by Catholic teaching on faith and morals. This is no different than how Aquinas redeemed Aristotle. The alternative to this is to believe that the teaching of the Catholic Church is unlimited and then try and change those teachings. This is the approach of the modernists, the Society of Judas, and Pope Francis. The reality is that these heretics take the garbage of Marxist progressivism and try to dress it up in Catholic infallibility. They basically rewrite that document while claiming constitutional authority. Yes, they are utterly wicked and evil in this regard. The Catholic Church is not an authority on something like climate change. The Catholic Church can teach that it is moral and right to take care of the environment out of respect for God and for the sake of others. That is for the scientists to work out. The same also applies to politics and economics. If you struggle with these issues or how to reconcile your politics with your faith, I absolutely recommend The Politically Incorrect Guide to Catholicism. John Zmirak did a good thing when he wrote this volume. It has helped me a great deal on a lot of issues. It will certainly help you, too.
