Read both accounts and notice differences. Ideological or Biographical The main idea is faith, but the miracle could also be outlined around the centurion. There are differences in the gospel accounts of this miracle. Some think these are two different miracles. But I think they refer to the same miracle because: They are both about a Centurion and his slave. The main reason some think these are two different miracles is because Matthew says that the Centurion himself went to see Jesus. Luke says that the centurion sent subordinates. Did the centurion go himself or send others? It is passages like this that the critics hold up to show that the Bible is full of mistakes. It is the epitome of arrogance for a man to come along and say that the Bible is wrong. Through the years men have made many claims that the Bible is wrong. Then, archaeologists come along and prove that the Bible is right after all. Paul was the author but someone else wrote it for him. Good secretaries can write letters for their bosses that only need to be signed. Are the letters from the secretary or the boss? Nixon was not at the Watergate hotel. Why was he impeached? Because he was responsible. The answer to the differences between the two passages is -- The official was a man in authority and he sent representatives, but it is the same thing as him going as far as his faith is concerned. For his purposes, it was easier, but still accurate, to just say it was the centurion. He approaches Jesus through Jews. That was the proper way for a Gentile to come to God in OT economy. Here is a Gentile who really understands and recognizes Jesus for who he is. He also was very concerned for a servant and that was very untypical. His knowledge of God and love for God is shown by his love for his fellow man. He was a generous man and had built a synagogue so that he could worship the one true God with the Jews. The Testimony of the Centurion 11 1 His humility The centurion, a man in authority is placing himself under the authority of Jesus. He feels he is not worthy. Again, we see the extraordinary godliness of this man. That is the hurdle that keeps them from experiencing the grace of God. This miracle is an illustration of the final statement in the sermon on the mount that the crowds were amazed that Jesus spoke with such authority Mat 7: Here is one man who did. Perhaps he heard the sermon on the mount. This Gentile really does understand a lot, believes it and acts on it. Luke leaves this out because he is writing to a Gentile audience. There are a couple of things we can learn from this: This requires a literal future millennium. There is a warning. See Weeping and gnashing of teeth discussion: Condemnation of Israel for rejecting Messiah and they are in danger of losing their expected place in the kingdom of heaven. What gets you in and keeps you out? Accepting Jesus as the Messiah. They were not in and then thrown out. It is like being beat out of a job. You never got it. Who are the sons of the kingdom? That is what Jesus calls great faith. His underlying character trait is humility. Israel refused to subject itself to the Messiah. Where is the healing? It is back at the house and almost not a part of the miracle story. The truth surrounding the miracles is overwhelming. The miracle is still important because it verifies the truth, but it is not what gets the emphasis. In our day, those who believe that tongues and healing are still happening put their emphasis on the tongues and miracles. Those who emphasize these gifts prove that they are not legitimate. The man built their synagogue. This man knew and applied the OT scriptures and recognized the Messiah when he arrived. True faith is demonstrated in a humble approach to God. The Jews rejected Christ and were replaced - Rom A man is a good leader when he is a good follower.

After a series of fairly mediocre designs in the A series in the past, and bearing in mind the threat posed by the German 88 mm gun, the War Office demanded a major revision of the design requirements, specifically: A high reverse speed was specified, as during the fighting in southern Italy, Allied tanks were trapped in narrow sunken roads by the German Army. The modified production gearbox had a two-speed reverse, with the higher reverse speed similar to second gear. The Christie suspension, with vertical spring coils between side armour plates, was replaced by a Horstmann suspension with three horizontally sprung, externally mounted two-wheel bogies on each side. The Horstmann design did not offer the same ride quality as the Christie system, but took up less room and was easier to maintain. The hull was redesigned with welded, sloped armour and featured a partially cast turret with the highly regarded 17 pounder. With a Rover -built Rolls-Royce Meteor engine, as used on the Comet and Cromwell, the new design would have excellent performance. The War Office decided it would be wiser to build new trailers, rather than hamper what appeared to be a superb design. The answer has to be a qualified negative. Subsequently, twenty pilot models were ordered with various armament combinations: However, the glacis plate was highly sloped, and so the effective thickness of the armour was very high—a design feature shared by other effective designs, such as the German Panther tank and Soviet T The tank was also highly mobile, and easily outperformed the Comet in most tests. The tank entered service in December with the 5th Royal Tank Regiment. The new Centurion Mark III also featured a fully automatic stabilisation system for the gun, allowing it to fire accurately while on the move, dramatically improving battlefield performance. Improvements introduced with the Mk 3 included a more powerful version of the engine and a new gun sight and gun stabiliser. And it was found possible to put the Centurion on some European rail routes with their larger loading gauges. America was keen to have Centurions supplied to Denmark and the Netherlands under the Mutual Defence Assistance Program, as production of the M48 Patton would not start until April. Engines had to be started every half hour, with each gear being engaged in turn to prevent them from being frozen into place. They taught us that anywhere a tank can go, is tank country: The 2nd Bn of the Parachute Regiment landed by ship in the harbour. Centurions of the British 6th Royal Tank Regiment were landed and by Meanwhile, 40 Commando supported by the Royal Tank Regiment remained engaged in clearing the downtown of Egyptian snipers. Colonel Ewen Southby-Tailyour arranged for more reinforcements to be brought in via helicopter. Although they successfully conducted combat operations in their areas of operations, reports from the field stated that their lightly-armoured MA1 armoured personnel carriers were unable to force their way through dense jungle [36] limiting their offensive actions against enemy forces. The Australian government, under criticism from Parliament, decided to send a squadron of Australian Centurion tanks to South Vietnam. Originally deployed as 26 Centurion tanks, after three and a half years of combat operations, 58 Centurions had served in country; 42 had suffered battle damage with six beyond repair and two crewmen had been killed in action. Six Pakistani armoured regiments were opposed by three Indian armoured regiments. One of these regiments, 3 Cavalry, fielded 45 Centurion tanks. The Centurion, with its 20 pounder gun and heavy armour, proved to be more than a match for the M47 and M48 Pattons. On the other side, when Pakistani Army commanders made good use of M47 Pattons and M48 Pattons, they proved to be quite capable of destroying Centurion tanks, as witnessed in the Battle of Chawinda in the Sialkot sector. In, at the Battle of Basantar, an armoured division and an armoured brigade of the Pakistani I Corps confronted two armoured brigades of the Indian I Corps, which had Centurion tanks. Casualties were heavily skewed against the Pakistani force, with 46 tanks destroyed. This section needs additional citations for verification. Some Centurion tanks were destroyed and about 30 captured by the Israeli Army. Israelis entering Hebron captured 25 Jordanian Centurion tanks. The Royal Guards Brigade had one regiment that was also equipped with Centurions. After the war, the army was rearmed and more Centurion tanks were purchased. In , the 40th Armoured Brigade, the Jordanian elite armoured formation, was reequipped with Centurions. The reinforced Syrian 5th division, with up to Ts, encountered Jordanian units consisting of the 25th Infantry and elements of the 40th Armoured Brigade around ar-Ramtha. In "â€”, surviving Centurions of the Jordanian Army were refitted with the diesel engine and transmission of the M60A1 tank in place of the original Meteor petrol engine, Belgian SABCA computerised fire-control system, which incorporated a laser range-finder and passive night sight for the gunner, Cadillac Gage electro-hydraulic turret drive and stabilisation system and a new Teledyne Continental hydropneumatic suspension in place of the Hortsman units. These upgraded vehicles were called the Tariq. After retirement from service with the arrival of ex-British Challenger tanks in the late s, several Tariqs were converted into heavy APCs. A purchase request was sent to Great Britain, but the reply was that no deliveries could be made before the needs of the British Army had been satisfied, which was deemed to take between five and 15 years. Parallel with this, negotiations were initiated with France about buying the AMX The British stance altered in early December , due to the economic necessity of increasing exports to earn scarce foreign currency. Britain offered to sell the desired Centurions immediately. The Centurions, together with the Stridsvagn , formed the backbone of the Swedish armoured brigades for several decades. The Mk 3 and the Mk 5 were upgraded with a mm gun in the s, becoming strv Between and , the Centurions had a midlife renovation and modification REMO done, which included among other things night vision equipment, targeting systems, laser range finders, improved gun stabilisation, thermal sleeves on the barrel and exhaust pipes and reactive armour developed by the Swedish FFV Ordnance. They were replaced with the Stridsvagn and Stridsvagn Were the tank manned, the crew would most likely have been killed by the shock wave. The turret crew were all wounded by shrapnel as the RPG hollow charge jet entered the lower left side of the fighting compartment, travelled diagonally across the floor and lodged in the rear right corner. Trooper Carter was evacuated, while the others remained on duty and the tank remained battleworthy. Although other tanks were subjected to nuclear tests, is the only one known to have withstood a blast and to go on for another 23 years of service, including 15 months on operational deployment in a war zone.

It essentially says that if you talk to any foreign government not approved by Washington about any civilian topic such as energy policy, you can be accused of being a foreign agent, wiretapped and charged with a crime: But in no way, shape or form is it about the theft or compromise of military secrets, which is the only possible justification for governments to spy on their own citizens. By wantonly infringing upon his constitutional right to free speech at home and abroad, therefore, Obama officials committed the gravest possible assault on American democracy: Indeed, the FISA application "slathered in blackout ink as it is" proves that the real meddlers in the election are the names listed below who signed the originally approved application. The aim of the latter, of course, was to spy on other higher-up advisors and possibly even Trump himself "and for the ultimate purpose of disrupting his campaign and defeating his candidacy. If that smacks of a preventative Deep State coup" it was. After all, spying on the campaign of the nominee for President of one of the two major political parties could be justified only by the very gravest evidence that the candidate was a secret agent of an avowed and dangerous enemy of America. Neither pertained in this case. When the first FISA application on Carter Page was submitted in July of and rejected by the court the Intelligence Community IC had nothing on Trump except the unverified and ridiculously salacious initial reports of the so-called Steele Dossier. Likewise, by any reasonable reading of the evidence Russia was an uncooperative adversary of US foreign policy. But it was not a mortal enemy or existential threat to the homeland by any stretch of the imagination "and therefore one that would justify extraordinary intervention in the election process by the national security machinery of the state. By whatever manner Trump might have come to his conclusions about Russia policy, it was a valid alternative to be decided by the electorate" not a mortal threat to national security that warranted a surreptitious attack on his candidacy by the Deep State. To wit, the Obama national security apparatchiks were nearly rabid with petty spite against a foreign leader who had countermanded their efforts at regime change in Syria and NATO expansion in eastern Europe. As we described at length in Part 2, Washington had turned on Putin with malice aforethought after he adroitly and constructively defused the Syrian chemical weapons canard in and justifiably came to the defense of Russian speaking populations in Crimea and the Donbas in after the US fostered coup by anti-Russian nationalists and crypto-fascists in Kiev. Yet for these alleged transgressions against the writ of the Empire, Putin has been virtually turned into the Devil Incarnate by official Washington; and any American who has come within a country-mile of his allegedly sulfurous vapors is now apparently fair game to be accused of being his sinister agent. If that is not the equivalent of 21st century witchcraft, we do not know what is. After all, any one in possession of even a modicum of adult reasoning should be able to see that there are two sides to the Syria and Crimea story. To the contrary, the Russian sanctions were recently minted and thoroughly debatable and reversible policies of a President whose term was expiring. They had nothing to do with protecting military secrets, the vital security of the homeland or even sacred national commitments written in stone owing to their embrace by generations of officials who had gone before. We cannot make the last point strongly enough. In fact, that occurred in late March and was held for the purpose of damage control after the Donald had averred that he got his foreign policy advice mainly by watching TV! As it happened, however, virtually the entire GOP foreign policy establishment was then in the Never Trump Camp "so Trump headquarters virtually polled the phone book to get some names on a list that could be paraded before the press. Stephanopoulos followed up, asking, "no e-mail, no text, nothing like that? The announcement initially drew attention because Page, who owns and is the sole employee of the energy consulting firm Global Energy Capital, was a relative unknown. Well, of course he was an unknown no count. Moreover, a national security investigation worthy of the name could have determined that in a day or two by simply reading the newspaper and consulting the FBI closed case on the unwitting and harmless contacts he had had with Russian government personal during the period. As FBI Special Agent Gregory Monaghan noted in an originally sealed complaint against several alleged Russian spies, Page had been the target of a recruitment effort around , but never took the bait and was even ridiculed by his would be handlers as not one of the sharpest tools in the shed. According to the documents, Page and Podobnyy first met at an energy symposium in New York in January At this conference, Podobnyy gave his contact information to Page, who subsequently followed up with the Russian both by email and in-person to talk about energy policy. In fact, the section of the document discussing Page never characterizes him as a conscious spy or security risk, instead framing him as a victim of Sporyshev and Podobnyy, who expressly denied that Page knew about their status as intelligence agents. Agent Monaghan followed this up by also detailing how Page cooperated with FBI officials in telling them about his contact with Podobnyy during their subsequent interview with him: Yet the rabid anti-Trumpites in the fifth estate insist on absolute silliness like the following as proof that Page was a tool of the Russkies. Yet any one with a modicum of common sense can see that Page was merely pitching his credentials as an international energy expert of standing: The context for this boast of sorts is straightforward. Carter Page had been a stock analyst in the Merrill Lynch Moscow office between and , and thereafter set out to peddle himself as an international energy expert and the proprietor of a two-bit international energy advisory firm of which he was the only employee. In that capacity he bounced around various international energy conferences in New York, London and St. Petersburg and undoubtedly attempted to burnish his credentials by touting his contracts in Moscow. Even then, his invitation to speak at a Moscow conference in July resulted in nothing more than a follow-on effort by CIA operative Stefan Halper to entrap him. All the rest of the material in the FISA application is false, and was cycled from the Steele Dossier in three different ways. That is, it is cited directly in the application as fact and also through the Harry Reid letter to the FBI of September and the Michael Isikoff story in Yahoo News “ both of which came via leaks from the Steele Dossier. The fact is, the Washington swamp is crawling with operatives who live in the lap of luxury advising foreign government about how to influence US policy. By some estimates that involves upwards of 20, high paid agents of Washington law firms, consultancies and other racketeering organizations which generate billings of billions per year. Even the most rapid anti-Russkie neocons have never accused Putin of doing anything close to that. At the end of the day, Carter Page was really nothing more than a small time Swamp Creature plying his trade in the international energy policy arena. Self-evidently, he had nothing to do with either stealing military secrets or advising candidate Trump on Russia policy. David Stockman was a two-term Congressman from Michigan. Centurion. The person with the coin is the Real Centurion, while those with the coins are just regular soldiers who are trying to convince you that they are the.

Note the prominent display of the vine staff , his sign of office. In the Roman infantry , centurions initially commanded a centuria or "century". Centuries, or centuriae, developed from the Roman tribal system under the Servian reforms and could contain to legionaries. Later, generals and Caesars further manipulated these numbers with double and half-strength units. Julius Caesar , for instance, made the first century double strength. Centurions seemed to receive a much higher rate of pay than the average legionary, which is twice as much or more possibly as much as 17 times as much as a legionary soldier [7]. Veteran legionaries often worked as tenants of their former centurions. The very best centurions were then promoted to become centurions in the First Cohort, called Primi Ordines, commanding one of the ten centuries and also taking on a staff role. The most senior centurion of the legion was the Primus Pilus who commanded the first century. All centurions, however senior, had their own allocated century. There was little difference between the ranks of centurions except for the Primus Pilus. The Primus Pilus also participated in war councils. Only eight officers in a fully officered legion outranked the Primus Pilus: Comparisons between the centurion grades and modern officer ranks can lead to many incorrect assumptions. Centurions could be elected, appointed by the Senate, or promoted "from the ranks" for a variety of reasons. If this case were strictly so, then there would be a lack of centurions in peacetime garrisons, which is where the Roman Army mostly spent its time. Centurions often suffered heavy casualties in battle, generally fighting alongside the legionaries they commanded. They usually led from the front, occupying a position at the front right of the century formation. They could be identified by the transverse horse-hair crest on top of their helmet, their metal greaves and unlike the legionaries the sword worn on the left, like all Roman officers. They also sought to display the skill and courage that may have brought them to their rank in the first place. Below the centurions were the optiones , seconds-in-command of centuries. Being held personally responsible for the training and discipline of the legionaries under their command, centurions had a well-deserved reputation for dealing out harsh punishment. Evidence suggests that centurions had important social status and held powerful positions in society. They seem to have received their status according to their rank. Centurions began by leading junior centuries before being promoted to leading a more senior one. Promotion usually came with experience, or at least length of service, but many still never made it as far as leading a 1st cohort. Yet for centurions who showed, say, particularly conspicuous bravery during battle, there was the opportunity to be promoted several grades at once. The precedence during the times of the manipular legion, commanding sixty men, was organized like this: Ten junior and ten senior Principes: Ten junior and ten senior Triarii: Five junior and five senior For the imperial legion they were organized in order of who advanced first ; 1st cohort.
