If any book can change a nation's thinking, it has to be this brilliant and perceptive work by one of the most tough-minded bearers of the torch of liberalism.*

Something happened to me this week. This whole Kavanaugh thing has just made me ill. Because, as a victim of sexual molestation myself, I take the accusations against Brett Kavanaugh very seriously. I think liberals have behaved abominably. I think the president, as always, made a bad situation worse. I understand why so many women feel traumatized by this. I think the death threats against both Ford and Kavanaugh are unacceptable. So is calling Ford a lying slut. You have to be all in for one team or the other. What really got to me was my female liberal friends who thought Kavanaugh should be tarred and feathered, but still revered Bill Clinton. So, I finally called them out on it. I posted on my Facebook page "All women who think Kavanaugh should be disqualified but voted for Bill Clinton should just shut up. The most surprising thing was the number of my female friends who agreed with me! One liberal friend even admitted that Clinton should have resigned. Several tried to argue the lame point that we could vote a president out, but Supreme Court justices are for life! Most of them argued that his relationship with Monica Lewinsky was consensual. So, I brought up Juanita Broaddrick. For that they had no answer. I resisted the urge to tell her she sounded just like Republicans who were cool with whatever Donald Trump might do because, hey! The economy is doing great! The second most surprising part was that nobody unfriended me. But we actually had a mostly respectful dialogue. We offered our opinions and considered the opposing side. We need more of that these days.

The online home of resurgent conservatives committed to freedom, faith, and family.
