Stripping out of her boots and clothes, she face planted on the bed, bare-assed as the day she was born. After a bit of wiggling, she managed to pull the covers over her and curled up in the center of the queen-size bed. Of course, now that jerkwad was out of her life, she was going to have tons of time to sleep by herself. The alcohol-induced haze made her feel like she was floating, drifting on a cloud. Her stomach no longer felt queasy. Shiloh closed her eyes and dozed. A while later, she thought she heard a noise in the room, but dismissed it as her imagination. She sighed and rolled over. When the bed dipped, she bolted upright, clutching the blankets to her chest. Oh hell, had she picked the wrong bed? There was a click and a lamp turned on. She squinted until her eyes adjusted. Dark hair was buzzed short, and his profile showed a strong jaw and long, straight nose. There was an Army tattoo on one bicep. His broad back was toned, and his arms looked large enough to break someone in half. Or cuddle them really close. She gave herself a mental slap. When his blue eyes focused on her, her tongue stuck to the roof of her mouth. No one had ever looked at her like that before. She shook her head. He gave her a sardonic smile. So, if you were looking to trap him in some way, you picked the wrong mark. She trembled a little at the thought of the powerful man caging her in putting his lips on hers. The thought of his hands on her body— Heat flushed her cheeks and spread down into her chest. Shiloh had never been kissed so thoroughly before. His expertise was enough to make her weak-kneed and ready to beg for more. Her body burned and she dropped the blankets to reach for him. As he pushed her back against the bed, she became acutely aware of the fact he was just as naked as her. Was she really about to have sex with a complete stranger? He trailed hot kisses down her neck, giving her ear a nip. A shiver skated down her spine as her nipples puckered. He can do whatever he wants to me.

THE SERGEANT'S BABY is an interesting military romance starring a likable heroine and an unlikable throwback cretin. The story line centers on the battle between the sexes, which is fun to follow. Is profanity losing its punch? Chocolate molten delight with creme anglaise is a simple yet elegant make-ahead dessert The terrible news traveled 10, miles to reach to Steven Garcia. Army sergeant was on overseas deployment in Seoul, a patrol supervisor with the 1st Military Police Company. As the days crept on in January, another role was coming in fast: Garcia waited for his wife Marina to deliver to their child back in Arizona. But when the report came from home, it was bad. Not only was the baby alive - and a boy - but the focal point of a bizarre criminal investigation. The child also was not his. To hide the evidence, she allegedly concocted a plan to hand the newborn over to a couple in Texas, allegedly forging the necessary paperwork to keep the adoption below the legal radar. After pulling the car over, the officer found three people inside - Alex Hernandez, 33, his wife Leslie, 41, and a newborn baby boy. Upon questioning, the couple admitted the 3-day-old baby was not their biological child. The Hernandez couple told police they had been given the baby by Marina Garcia, and that they had "conspired with the birth mother Garcia to forge the signature as the father to take possession of the infant child," according to court documents quoted by the Range News. The same day, police traveled to Sierra Vista, Arizona, to interview Marina. Living with a boyfriend, an Army specialist, she admitted to conspiring with the Texas couple. According to Stars and Stripes, Marina told investigators she planned to travel to Texas to sign away her parental rights once she had recovered from the birth. Back in South Korea, Garcia was contacted by investigators, who told him his child was actually still alive, and a boy. The sergeant took an emergency leave to visit the child, who was taken into state custody. The baby - named Leo, according to the Stars and Stripes - is now with foster parents. Paternity tests determined Garcia was not the father. He has since filed for divorce from his wife. Each was given four years of supervised probation for the charges. Marina Garcia pleaded guilty to a felony charge of attempted scheme to defraud, according to News 4. She refused to comment on the details of the case when a News 4 reporter knocked on her door recently. Garcia told News 4 his own experience as an adopted child directed his moral compass.
