Melanie Edwards , Super Kisser The Fabulous Five Together Again Class Trip Calamity 1. The Fabulous Five in Trouble 2. A good non-numbered series. Me and Fat Glenda â€” 2. Hey Remember Fat Glenda? A curio in that it bore more likeness to a thematic series than a character driven series. All the characters went to Hammond high but were unlinked by friendship. Being unencumbered by linking the stories the authors had the freedom to be fresh and find their own tone. The characters were lively and the action though typical , fun. Definitely worth a look. Is there a Cure for Sophomore Year? Faking It â€” Betsy Haynes 3. So Who wants to be Popular Anyway? High â€” Susan Blake 5. I say this because Susan Saunders was borrowed for two of the books which have some similarities to her series the Sleepover Friends. The other main writer was Lisa Norby who had been writing for lots of teen series like Cheerleaders , Heart to Heart , Turning points and who knows what else. The series was finished off by Anna Jo Douglas. Fifth Grade Stars featured the sudden friendship of five girls who have one thing in common â€” they share the purposed stigma of riding the Sugar Tree Acres bus Route to and from the ex-boondocks-now-new subdivision. The girls are Jan Bateman the likeable average girl who longs at times for a taste of popularity , Karen Fisher who loves sci-fi but often feels put upon for her sensible, quiet nature , kooky Amy Danner who expresses herself with wild clothing and the twins Beth and Sara Greenfield. Beth is energetic and craves excitement while Sara the more introverted of the two continues a never ending project of writing her own romance novel. The girls battle the Clovers a bunch of snobby rich girls lead by Holly Hudnut who demands all of the Clovers wear side ponytails. The stories bounce along with a good deal of energy often ending in the Stars triumphing over some competition with the Clovers â€” unfortunately there were too many other series out there like this which is probably why it went belly-up after six books. Crazy Campout â€” Lisa Norby â€” 4. Twin Trouble â€” Susan Saunders â€” 5. Star Reporter â€” Lisa Norby â€” 6. The Goofy Gamble â€” Anna Douglas â€” First Kiss â€” Put out by Ivy in this series was rather ill-timed, with First Love repackaged as Keepsake and ready to turn in, along with Crosswinds and all of the other thematic romance series since long gone â€” Wildfire , Wishing Star , Windswept etc. It seemed with the Babysitters club and Sweet Valley High swaggering along the shelves like pants-hitching bigwigs thematic romances had gone the way of yesterdays news. Too bad , this series idea was actually interesting- instead of featuring sixteen year-olds, the girls, would generally be freshman just entering high school and getting ready for the First Kiss of the series title. The stories were the usual blend of romance and light drama and the packaging was nice albeit the fuzzy soft focus close up shots were a tad unusual, all in all bad timing hampered this series more than anything. Head over Heels â€” Susan Blake 2. Love Song â€” Suzanne Weyn 3. Falling For You â€” Carla Bracale 4. The Perfect Couple â€” Helen Santori 5. With a plethora of interesting , unique writers they offered up romance and adventure four times a month! They were without a doubt the most original offering up exotic locations â€” the amazon with parrot smuggling , soup kitchens for the homeless mixed up in a diamond heist, even daredevils in the Ozarks. Also exotic adventures â€” a girl living in an underwater vessel like a mermaid , a teen with telepathy , a girl whose compulsion to take a walk discovers it could all be just kismet for a certain boy , while another girl , after designing her own computer game, decides to buy her own house! New Boy in Town â€” Dorothy Francis â€” 2. Girl In the Rough â€” Josephine Wunsch â€” 3. Serenade â€” Adienne Marceau â€” 5. Flowers for Lisa â€” Veronica Ladd â€” 6. Kate Herself â€” Helen Erskine â€” 7. Songbird â€” Carrie Enfield â€” 8. Special Girl â€” Dorothy Francis â€” 9. Please Love me Somebody â€” Maud Johnson â€” Sometime my Love â€” Oneta Ryan â€” Promised Kiss â€” Veronica Ladd â€” Summer Romance â€” Rebecca Diamond â€” Someone to Love â€” Ann Bryan â€” Golden Girl â€” Helen Erskine â€” We Belong Together â€” Elaine Harper â€” Teach Me to Love â€” Wendi Davis â€” That Special Summer -Deborah Kent â€” When September Returns â€” McClure Jones â€” Dream Lover â€” Constance Treadwell â€” The Personal Touch â€” Caroline Cooney â€” A Time for Us

*The Summer for Weddings (Elizabeth Gail Wind Rider Series #17) [Hilda Stahl] on calendrierdelascience.com *FREE* shipping on qualifying offers. What a summer for weddings this was going to be! Elizabeth and Jerry had said good-bye when she left for Maddox.*

Elizabeth is sent away through the foster care system and then subsequently returned to her mother. She eventually makes peace with her birth father, after he dies, as she receives a puzzle box in which he had hidden for her many special things, including a document which gives her a part of a ranch in the Nebraska Sandhills. Usually, during her early life, she is returned to her mother so that she can receive state aid money to help raise her. As a result, she is derisively called "Aid Kid". The final straw comes when her selfish and extremely abusive mother locks her in a closet after beating her with an extension cord. This forces the courts to put Marie under a restraining order and set the stage for removal of the child. During this time, Marie decides to leave the United States for Australia. Gwen Miller, a social worker, takes Elizabeth Gail, sometimes called Libby, out of this violently abusive household, and brings her to a farm outside of the Midwestern town unnamed in which they lived. This is where the books themselves begin. And so she becomes the foster daughter of Charles and Vera Johnson. Charles, also called Chuck, is a farmer who also owns a store in the community, and Vera is a housewife. They already have three children of their own: He makes it clear that he will protect and love her. And that he does throughout the entire series. Although she had been very headstrong, Elizabeth dearly loved Gwen the best out of all her social workers. Prior to Gwen, Elizabeth had had a social worker named Mrs. However, she somehow feels deep inside that she belonged at this one, and the family makes certain that she was. She soon realizes that what makes them different is their belief in God, and that they have prayed for her. They take on another foster child, Toby Smart, and after some fits and starts, Libby and Toby become family. As she grows older, however, she gets over her fear of and grows to love Goosy Poosy, who is actually very friendly. Marla Kremeen, to take Libby from her new home, and back into a life of unhappiness and abuse. Fortunately this fails, thanks to the help of her maternal grandmother, who has a lot of animosity towards Marie and seemingly towards Libby, who writes letters to her frequently anyway after finding her in the same town her adopted grandparents live in. Up until that time, she had flat-out refused to sign the papers, as she wished to use her to get aid money. However, not long after she is adopted, Marie enlists the help of her equally promiscuous and conniving sister, Phyllis LaDere, to kidnap Elizabeth. When Chuck and the police in Chicago come to her rescue, Marie, Phyllis and the male companions who had connived with them to kidnap Elizabeth, had all disappeared, emptying the house as well. This spells the end of Marie Dobbs and any other attempts to separate Elizabeth and the Johnsons. As she becomes more and more part of the family, and becoming part of their home and religious life, she becomes a better person. The values which the Johnsons instill in her become a part of her, and we see her grow spiritually as she accepts Christ as her Saviour. All the while, she makes friends, and also finds some enemies. Libby, at first a person who clearly knows how to fight, due to being exposed to abuse most of her life, breaks her nose. As she matures however, she stops lashing out physically. Some time later, she and Brenda become friends as she helps Brenda to accept the Lord. Eventually, Brenda grows up and marries a minister. Elizabeth also has another rival in rich and snobby Joanne Tripper. Brown-nosing Joanne makes clear her disdain of Elizabeth and her friends and family, though, in particular, Libby, because of her jealousy of her talent at concert piano. This is mainly because Joanne herself has trouble getting a place with Rachael. Yet Elizabeth proves her wrong and plays a wonderful concert piano, although Joanne is her chief rival through the rest of the book series. In fact, many of her friends are from the foster care system that she gets out of finally. Her best friend is a girl named Jill Noteboom, who is an aspiring writer. Jill gives birth to their son, Matthew, near the end of the series. She is also close to identical twins April and May Brakie, who had been in a foster home where the husband, a man named Morris Stern, has sexually abused both May and Elizabeth.

Sadly, no one believes May or Elizabeth, and it takes Chuck to finally get someone to believe the girls. Eventually, Morris and Evelyn Stern moved out of the community, and until a new Christian family takes the twins in, they stay with Elizabeth and her family. Elizabeth is also close to Grandma Feuder who lives nearby. She and Elizabeth become close and she gives her loving advice that helps her when she is confused about things. Grandma eventually dies, but wills a teddy bear that she loves very much to Elizabeth, who keeps it. As time goes on, they all grow up. While she is at Maddox School of Music, Elizabeth meets Badden Lindsay, a concert pianist who is in demand at the time. During this time, she discovers that her look-alike cousin, Tammy LaDere, is her half-sister their father, Frank Dobbs, had had an affair with both Marie and her sister, Phyllis. As such, Tammy later becomes a Christian and a part of the Johnson family as well. Their similar troubles help them bond. As such, the Johnsons help her with the same kind of love and compassion that Elizabeth herself had received when she became a part of the Johnson family. Tammy later marries Nolen Brown, a ranch hand at the Sandhill Ranch in Nebraska that Frank has left to Libby, and which she then shares with her half-sister. Tammy remains in Nebraska for her wedding and then lives with Nolen and their family there. Then, during a time when Badden is recuperating at the Johnson farm from a long concert tour, he falls in love with Elizabeth, and soon after, they, too, are married and they become a concert piano team.
