All images are of actual books from my personal collection. Printed on white wove paper. Olive-green wrappers, printed in black, and trimmed flush with body of the book. One copy one Very Good 5. Light olive-green wrappers, printed in black, and trimmed flush with body of the book. Below the frame and equal to its width are two horizontal dark blue lines. In all respects it is internally the same as the edition described above. However, the inner border on the front cover is not edged in black as in the case of 5. What may have happened is that Girodias had his usual number of copies run off, but only bound up a percentage of them for sale. Later, when these were exhausted, he had the remaining sheets bound in new wrappers, with an increase of price. Carroll, a photojournalist, had met Monroe on the set of the movie Niagara in He asked Carroll to spice it up, which he did. Falling for Marilyn, a book of photographs Carroll took of Monroe in , appeared posthumously in One Copy Very Good 5.
