February 11, istock In theory, the movies are great, right? You roll up to the theater with a friend or your significant other, and get in line to buy your tickets. Mildly annoyed, you take your seatsâ€”all the way up front, because those are the only ones availableâ€”crane your neck, and watch as the opening credits roll. Then, just as the action gets good and your neck has adjusted to that unnatural posture, you feel a familiar pressure on your bladder. Here are 10 tips to help your trip to the local theater be what you hoped it would all along: Buy tickets in bulk. Cinemark offers a bulk ticket program called Platinum Supersaver, while Regal Cinemas offers Premiere Movie Tickets for deep discounts. Most theaters also offer discounts for anyone with a valid military, student, or senior citizen I. Give these apps a try. Runpee is exactly what it sounds like: Choose your seats carefully. Not all seats are created equal. Audio technicians usually check the sound about two-thirds of the way back and in the center of the auditorium, which means this is the best place to sit for crisp, clean audio. If you sit too far off to the side, the sound might be softer than in the center. While the film industry standard for sound is 85 decibels, many theaters actually turn up the volumeâ€”to the point where certain scenes hit decibels. If nothing else strikes your fancy, ask for a voucher that can be redeemed on your next visit. If fellow audience members, not the plot, are the problem, most theaters will try to make it up to you with free tickets or concessions. Choose your snacks wisely. Some theaters will connect the exhaust from their popcorn machines to vents in the auditorium in order to sell more buckets. Grab an extra strawâ€”for your popcorn. Keep an eye out for free screenings. While these special advanced screenings are usually closed to the general public, there are a number of websites and services that can help you get access. This way, you have a good view of the entire screen and get the best sound experience at the same time. Sign up for a loyalty program. The more you spend at a certain chain, the more rewards you get. Regal Crown Club is a free program that gives members credits towards discounts on concessions and free tickets.
