Exclusive cover reveal and excerpt: Joyce Lamb September 12, Mira tries to ease her guilt by brewing helpful curatives, but her hunger tonics and headache remedies cannot right past wrongs or save the dissenters her mother vows to purge. Royal bastard Josse de Bourbon is more kitchen boy than fils de France. But when the Shadow Society assassinates the Sun King and half of the royal court, he must become the prince he was never meant to be in order to save his injured sisters and the petulant dauphin. They are sworn enemies, yet they form a tenuous pact to unite the commoners and former nobility against the Shadow Society. But can a rebellion built on mistrust ever hope to succeed? And the day after that. At least, I assume another day has come and gone. Each time after I eat, the faint sounds of coughing and crying reach me from somewhere down the tunnel. It lasts for what feels like an eternity through the day? No one can hear me in this dank, dripping place. She will hunt you and kill you. They must be getting close. He is made of stone: It near kills me, but I refuse his bread and water the following morning. He grunts and scowls and even tries to wedge it between my lips, but I eat nothing and drink only from the puddle beneath me. The water tastes of silt and iron and all manner of dreck. With every swallow, I feel it tainting my innards and poisoning my humours. Sickness gathers in my chest. Fever heats my cheeks. My limbs grow steadily heavier until they become boulders, too dense to budge. My head is an anchor, an anvil, a cannonball. He sighs and drags his feet to where I lie, nudging me with the toe of his boot. I hear it too the heavy tread of boots and garbled stream of cursing. I slit my eyes just enough to see his hateful friend burst into the cavern. A bit of parchment stamped with a crimson double-headed eagle seal. Hope surges through my frostbitten body. Little as I wish to return to the Louvre and the Shadow Society, anything would be better than perishing of jail fever at the hands of my captors. A hint of a smile bends my lips at the thought of dry clothes and a full belly. But then the boy I healed begins shouting. The smile melts off my lips. My heart ceases to beat. Of course Mother wants you. She needs you in the laboratory. Mother has always led the Society with an intensity bordering on ruthlessness, but she has always been my mother first: I will never be her favorite, but she would never disown me like this. His eyes are wild and manic in the torchlight, laced with strands of molten lead. His voice rumbles low and hoarse. We have no leverage to negotiate our way out of Paris and no allies within. I hold my breath, hold every muscle still. But I am not dead. And finally, finally, he has said something useful. And without his hat, I can better see the prominent cheekbones and gooseberry green eyes of the boy who feeds me. And I helped them. About Addie Addie spent her childhood in the wilds of Utah, playing soccer and riding horses. She now lives in Princeton, New Jersey, with her husband, daughter and wolf dog. An Affair of Poisons is her debut novel. Find out more at www.
