Set and produced almost exclusively in Albuquerque , New Mexico , the show follows the rise and fall of Walter White, a high school chemistry teacher who is diagnosed with lung cancer and turns to cooking meth. This tour focuses on the most prominent filming locations, which are scattered across the city. Expect to spend a full day to see all of them, or better yet work them into a longer trip to Albuquerque. I saw your set-up. You and I will not make garbage. We will produce a chemically pure and stable product that performs as advertised. This tour guide will contain major spoilers in the descriptions of its stops, so be forewarned. Because Albuquerque is located in the high desert, take the normal precautions for the climate: Winters are chilly, with temperatures frequently falling below freezing at night, so bring an extra sweater. Other than that, the only other thing you really need is a car with a full tank of gas. You might want to take timing into consideration to avoid heavy traffic: The freeways and the river crossings are the most prone to congestion. Get in and around[edit] Detailed information on getting into and around Albuquerque is located on the respective city page. For this tour, you will need a car, as the locations are simply spread too far out to make other options feasible, save for the handful of private tour operators who will drive you around a far more expensive option, and generally reserved only for those who really want to leave the driving to someone else. There are three clusters of filming locations: Where it all began: Robert Dam, a bizarre-looking set of concrete structures that serves to slow floodwaters, as well as the backdrop for two Season 5 scenes where Jesse and Walt wait for "the Disappearer" when they need to flee town. The Octopus Car Wash, where Walt works At this point, backtrack down Montgomery and south on Eubank, then make a right on Menaul; you should immediately see the This location also serves as an excuse to wash your car for all the driving you have left to do and get an air freshener for the road. The fastest way to get there from the Northeast Heights is going to be to take the freeway: Face Off[edit] On your way back to Albuquerque from Rio Rancho, you can see a couple of locations which relate to the character of Gus Fring. The first is where he died: Get onto Menaul Boulevard and head east, and make a quick detour to Just a little further south is The first is Just a couple of blocks west is the Across from the university campus at the corner of Central and Columbia is the former Make your way back onto Central Avenue and continue west into the Downtown area, which has the densest collection of filming locations from the show. A little further down Central and on the opposite side of the social spectrum is the rather upscale The southern end of the attached Another nearby filming location is the Continuing on, a block north of Central Avenue is a A couple of blocks south on 4th Street is the Directly south of Downtown, the The Rail Yards have been used for many scenes, including a Season 4 scene where Jesse saves Mike from a robbery and as the stand-in for a Philadelphia railyard in "Better Call Saul" where Mike kills two dirty cops, but fans might more readily recognize the green stained-glass windows of the massive old locomotive shop for their use in multiple promotional images for the show. In front of the Rail Yards is another highly recognizable location from the show: This is the place that Walt blows up in order to collect his money from Tuco in Season 1. Less than a block away is another location from early in the series: That took place here. Right across the street is a notable location from "Better Call Saul," Most of the industrial locations and a lot of the stand-ins for Mexico locations were filmed here: However, there are a few others that are still accessible: Right across Broadway is the This is where Walt and Jesse typically camped out with their RV. And this is where Walt told a drug dealer to say his name. This concludes the Albuquerque portion of the tour. Continue north on this paved road for 9. Continue up this dirt road until you reach the site; the exact location is at coordinates Honestly, finding it is going to be a lot easier if your car has a GPS device which you can enter the coordinates into, or at least if you have a companion with a smartphone keeping track of where you are while you drive. Eat and Drink[edit] One of the nice things about this tour are that many of the filming locations are dining establishments, which offers an easy excuse to grab something to eat whenever you get hungry. However, there are a few places not included in the tour above that still have a

Breaking Bad connection, and these are listed below. Beyond this, a more comprehensive list of dining options is in the Albuquerque guide; and really, no trip to New Mexico is complete without sampling the local cuisine.

Jackass Flat Vacation Packages The significant city of Melbourne is located 85 miles to the southeast of Jackass Flat. If you enjoy exploring Mother Nature, check out one or two of the region's natural areas.

There are 72 kilometers of climbing on the menu, totaling 5, meters of vertical gain. Needless to say, it will be a playground for the climbers. The year before that the Albertville to La Toussuire-Les Sybelles stage, won by Pierre Rolland, began with the same two opening passes before tackling the Mollard and the final ascent. Cycling is changing and the trend is to serve up more and more short stages, but we want to retain those days that made the Tour legendary. It used to be the tradition that the riders would spend many hours on the bike! The descent to La Chambre will lead onto the Montvernier hairpins. This will really test their mental strength. Ultimately, the 12th stage will be ideal for pure climbers who can repeat efforts at maximum threshold several times. A rouleur who is aiming to limit his losses in the mountains can do a to minute effort once, but not twice. The pure climbers can recover better during a stage like this. Dumoulin stayed close on GC, 1: Alaphilippe mopped up maximum points atop the hors categorie Madeleine as well as the Cat. However, the real drama began at the base of the Croix de Fer, with 18 kilometers to ride to the summit of the hors categorie monster. Steven Kruijswijk left his breakaway companions behind and went on a long solo attack.. For several kilometers, Bernal churned out a blistering tempo. Vincenzo Nibali Bahrain-Merida tested the water first with an attack. On both occasions, Bernal shut down the moves in short order. Thomas took up the chase and clawed back the move. Meanwhile, Nibali got tangled with a race moto and crashed, losing touch with the GC group. Reportedly, one fan even tried to punch Froome as he passed by. Undeterred, Froome tried an attack with about three kilometers to go and quickly caught and passed Kruijswijk. Romain Bardet put in a few serious attacks but was reeled back in. After the catch, the four eased up, riding side-by-side into the final two kilometers. This opened the door for Landa to rejoin the group. Thomas led the five into the final left-hand corner. Dumoulin sprinted up the inside from the fifth wheel but was too far back to challenge the yellow jersey for the win. He knows how to ride for three weeks. Tour de France Stage 12 Results.

ET The first week of the Tour will suit the sprinters. This year, there is a new crop of talent that will be gunning to make its mark in July, including Caleb Ewan, Fernando Gaviria, and Dylan Groenewegen. It will be exciting to see how the different generations match up. The stage 2 finale presents another serious test: After this stage, we should know more about the candidates for the green jersey. Sagan wins and takes yellow in hectic finale Peter Sagan won his ninth career Tour stage victory during stage 2 on Sunday. A crash inside the final 2km took out a large swath of sprinters, including stage 1 winner and overall leader Fernando Gaviria Quick Step-Floors and Michael Matthews Sunweb. Up and down, turn right. I said, the later the start the better today. I did my best. I lacked a little bit in the legs at the moment to stay with the fastest. I hope the legs come a little bit better as the race goes on. I was hoping for a little bit better today because the final suited me. An intermediate sprint 50km from the finish saw Sagan take second behind the lone leader, with Gaviria coming in third and Kristoff scooping up the remaining points in fourth. While he was physically okay, he was forced to chase back on while the pace in the bunch ramped up in anticipation of the sprint finish. In the last kilometers, you have the sprinters teams, and all the GC guys want to step there. They are also quite big roads so everyone is drag-racing a bit. The tension in the bunch increased until a crash on the tight right-hander with just 2km to go saw much of the peloton – including Gaviria – taken out of contention for the win. Bora-Hansgrohe quickly took advantage of having several riders in the reduced front group and drove the pace. Tour de France Stage 2 Results.

May 27, at PM Maybe more like a reindeer, they also served a pretty important purpose! You can really crunch up the dirt clods and elevate the rocks if you fence staple some chainlink fence under it and maybe put tire on it (on the wood parts) for a little weight.

This junction is well marked on S. From the west Lone Pine or Olancha: From the junction of S. From the east Stovepipe Wells: Be advised that even though Racetrack Valley Road is wide and frequently used, it often contains long stretches of "washboard" that will rattle the teeth out of any living thing! We have had to turn around before because it was just intolerable! To plan your best route, check with the National Park Service to see when the road was last graded. If you are taking the loop route via Racetrack and Lippencott Road, you will return to this junction at the end of the day. Be aware that some maps show a different alignment for Saline Valley Road leaving S. They show Saline Valley Road leaving S. In reality, it is 4. You can travel this other route, which goes through several talc mine ruins, however, it is a dirt road as opposed to the rough pavement on Saline Valley Road. The road is dirt all the way with many of the "standard" off-road challenges. Please read the Trip Log before taking your journey. It offers not only the mileages to the different unmarked turning points along the way but details of the possible road conditions you might run into. If you plan to incorporate the Lippencott Road, be sure to read that chapter before going. And remember, there are no services so make sure you have everything you need including fuel, water and food before starting your journey. Although no large talc deposits were ever discovered here, many smaller mines operated until This lead deposit was actually discovered in but was dubbed too remote to mine. Salsberry acquired the claims and built nearby Salina City. He even began working to create a railroad grade out of Racetrack Valley. The ore, however, proved to be not very valuable and grading was abandoned in For more historical information about the places mentioned above and this entire area, we recommend reading Hiking Death Valley and Death Valley and the Amargosa see references.

There are multiple accommodation options for vacationers chasing a nice place to stay in or around Jackass Flat. The Expedia database contains 35 hotels within a kilometre (mile) distance of Jackass Flat's central area.

Gaviria took the yellow and green jerseys as the leader of the general and points classifications respectively. Skujins became the first rider from Latvia to ever lead the mountains classification. Team Sky, BMC Racing Team, and Movistar Team controlled the peloton, where Geraint Thomas reeled in the final breakaway rider and won the three second time bonus sprint that put him back only three seconds behind Van Avermaet in the general classification. With only about a kilometre to go Dan Martin attacked and was able to stay away and win the stage one second ahead of the bulk of the general classification contenders. Romain Bardet and Tom Dumoulin suffered mechanical issues late in the stage which made them lose time. At the start of stage seven, Van Avermaet remained in the yellow jersey with Thomas in second at three seconds behind. The stage was won by Dylan Groenewegen. He held the jersey from stage three to ten. Groenewegen then won his second sprint stage in a row. Notably, Greipel and Gaviria were penalized for headbutting each other and lost their placing and green jersey points. Van Avermaet improved his lead in the general classification after earning a single second in the bonus sprint. Richie Porte abandoned after a crash for the second year in a row. Eventually, Alaphillipe attacked and won his first Tour stage while Van Avermaet retained his yellow jersey and extended his lead to nearly two and a half minutes, [54] when many people thought he would not be retaining it. In the steep finish of the eleventh, Thomas attacked in the final kilometre and passed lone breakaway rider Mikel Nieve Mitchelton's Scott to take the win. Dumoulin and Froome arose as the likely contenders in Paris. After the Alps, it was basically down to three riders in contention, Thomas, Froome, and Dumoulin. Smoke from flares and animosity towards Froome were a factor and better security was called for by many people for the final week. Stage fifteen, the start of the final week, was once again a breakaway victory. As the riders passed that point, there was still gas in the air. The race was neutralized for about fifteen minutes because several riders had problems with their eyes and had to rinse them. Later, Adam Yates, having taken the lead, fell on the final descent and handed the position and win to Alaphilippe, giving him his second stage win of the tour. Dumoulin moved into second place, 1: Thomas was able to consolidate his position in the yellow jersey by picking up six bonus seconds in the sprint thereby extending his lead over Dumoulin to 2 min 5 s. Thomas survived a scare when his back wheel locked, but completed the time trial successfully, finishing fourteen seconds behind Dumoulin taking a lead of 1 min 51 s into the final stage. The first three riders would get 10, 6, and 4 seconds, respectively. Time bonuses of three, two and one seconds, would be given to the first three riders to cross a "bonus point" in each of the first nine mass-start stages of the race. It would affect the general classification, but not the points.
