Placements in residential treatment centers, foster homes or psychiatric hospitals, according to Kagan, can become turning points for positive change, if family members confront the psychodynamics, "double bind" messages and deep-seated wounds underlying a child's maladaptive behavior.

Year of Unraveling Just as Robert F. Fresh on the heels of Martin Luther King, Jr. The turbulent s reached a boiling point in When the year began, President Johnson hoped to win the war in Vietnam and then cruise to a second term to finish building his Great Society. But events began to spiral out of his control. In February, the Tet Offensive in Vietnam brought a shift in American public opinion toward the war and low approval ratings for the President. When the Democratic primary votes were tallied in New Hampshire, McCarthy scored a remarkable 42 percent of the vote against an incumbent President. Johnson knew that in addition to fighting a bitter campaign against the Republicans he would have to fight to win support of the Democrats as well. His hopes darkened when Robert Kennedy entered the race in mid-March. On March 31, , Johnson surprised the nation by announcing he would not seek a second term. Humphrey was popular among party elites who chose delegates in many states. But Kennedy was mounting an impressive campaign among the people. His effort touched an emotional nerve in America "the desire to return to the Camelot days of his brother. Kennedy received much support from the poorer classes and from African Americans who believed Kennedy would continue the struggle for civil rights. The assassination of Robert F. When the party met for their convention in Chicago, thousands of anti-war protesters converged on the city and clashed with police who had been ordered by Chicago Mayor Richard Daley to take a tough stance with the demonstrators. Then waves of rioting swept America. The nation was numb. All eyes were focused on the Democratic Convention in Chicago that August. With Kennedy out of the race, the nomination of Hubert Humphrey was all but certain. Antiwar protesters flocked to Chicago to prevent the inevitable Humphrey nomination, or at least to pressure the party into softening its stance on Vietnam. Mayor Richard Daley ordered the Chicago police to take a tough stance with the demonstrators. As the crowds chanted "The whole world is watching," the police bloodied the activists with clubs and released tear gas into the streets. The party nominated Humphrey, but the nation began to sense that the Democrats were a party of disorder. In addition, members of his own party were challenging him for the nomination. In March , he made the stunning announcement that he would not seek another term in office. The Republicans had a comparatively smooth campaign, nominating Richard Nixon as their candidate. Nixon spoke for the "Silent Majority" of Americans who supported the effort in Vietnam and demanded law and order. Campaigning for "segregation now, segregation forever" Wallace appealed to many white voters in the South. Martin Luther King, Jr. In the last paragraph of this last speech by a great American orator, King, Jr. Limiting the War in Vietnam: There is divisiveness among us all tonight. This division that President Johnson mentioned in this famous address to the nation on March 13, was so strong that he decided to not seek reelection. May staff photo at 43ave, Vernon BC. Staff standing in the pre-construction spot of the new Our Place shelter. Originally based out of Kelowna the Society grew over the years, eventually providing services throughout the Okanagan, the Thompson region and the Kootenays. In Bill Hesketh was hired to provide case management to men and women, and their families, in the Okanagan and Kootenays who were recently released from jail. His work in the Okanagan and Kootenays called on him to travel throughout the region to meet with clients and connect them with employment, local social services and housing. Howard Industries quickly obtained forestry contracts throughout the Okanagan and Kootenay regions including the first Tree Farm License in the province run by a non-profit, leased farm land for agricultural operations, operated a recycling facility in the North Okanagan and a cedar shake mill, and ran a carpentry shop that built furniture and provided survey stakes to the forest industry and BC Hydro. Residents were also trained to care for Morgan horses used both for horse logging and community sleigh rides on the Commonage during the winter. Recognizing that the lack of affordable housing was a significant problem, Bill worked with local church groups, Alcoholics Anonymous volunteers and governments to open the first Howard House hostel in Vernon in at the old Topping family farm house. The hostel provided room and board for hundreds of transient men from December to April when the building burnt down. While there, the men built a chapel using logs they obtained from a contract to clear land for the Revelstoke Dam. At the time of the fire at the original Howard House, the Society had already purchased an old nurses residence from Vernon Hospital. The building was moved to 43rd Street and men moved into the building almost immediately. After 4 years of repairs and renovations the building was officially opened in and became the new Howard House. The Society also worked closely with addictions recovery groups such as Alcoholics Anonymous to provide recovery services to clients and Howard House residents. By, Bill had dedicated a number of rooms at the new Howard House for addictions recovery and worked closely with the hospital and the Health Unit to expand detox and ongoing support programs for addicts. Literacy programs and cognitive skills training were added over the years. The Society began providing direct residential and rehabilitation programs to minimum security inmates on Federal parole in at a forestry camp near Lumby and by at a Society owned woodlot in Lavington. Parole supervision at Howard House was also provided during this time and the Corrections Canada contracts soon reflected that parolees from medium and maximum security prisons began to be accepted. Tragedy and transformation By Howard House regularly housed 57 men per night but numbers rose to as high as 90 during the summer months when fruit pickers and other transient agricultural workers arrived in the Okanagan. Crawford expanded programming at Howard House to include a large community garden and a shelter for abandoned kittens, run by the parolees. By federal parolees occupied 27 of the beds available in the house. All parolees were accepted into the Howard House program only after being assessed for suitability by staff and their parole officer, and a community committee that included an RCMP officer. There were far more success stories than failures from to the early s and the halfway house gained a reputation for innovative programming and strong community connections. But starting in when a parolee who had previously been at Howard House murdered his female room mate- community concern began to grow regarding the presence of a halfway house in our community. In another former resident of Howard House was charged with murdering his common law wife. Although in neither case were the parolees a resident of Howard House at the time of their crimes, their presence in the community was linked to the halfway house. No matter what the challenges and successes the Society had had in the past, nothing could have prepared staff and Board members for the turmoil that resulted from the tragic murder in August of of Bill Abramenko an active, well known senior by a parolee who was UAL unlawfully at large from the halfway house. The parolee, Eric Fish, had failed to return to the house in June, but the community had not been informed and he was not apprehended until a few days after the murder. In the months following the murder the contract with Corrections Canada, which funded the halfway house, was revoked and the Executive Director took a leave of absence and then resigned in early . The Board of Directors for the Society hired Barbara Levesque to act as interim Executive Director and in the summer of she accepted the permanent position. At that time the Society employed only 6 full-time and part-time staff. It was clear that in order to survive, the Society would have to transform its operations. Beginning in , the rooms previously occupied by parolees on the second floor of Howard House were slowly renovated and updated to accommodate men seeking to stabilize their lives while paying room and board to the Society. New contracts were negotiated and signed with BC Housing to fully fund the 16 bed homeless shelter and over the years new programs were funded through community partnerships. Nine bedrooms were set aside to provide an in-house addictions recovery program in partnership with Interior Health, the employment program WorkFirst was expanded through contracts with Service Canada, and a new homeless shelter for men and women " Gateway Support Services " was opened in in partnership with BC Housing. In the following years, a Homeless Outreach Coordinator was hired to work with landlords and those seeking affordable housing " including single men and women and families. The Society also divested itself of programs and services that no longer fit its mandate, including the woodlot and the lease on the Commonage farm " but the large community garden at the Howard House continues to thrive, providing thousands of pounds of vegetables every year for house residents. In the Society received a generous donation of a large office space from Mike and Beverly Davies. Their request was to ensure the office was a space for community collaboration. The Society now employs more than 70 staff working part-time and full-time in our shelters, residences and community programs. We set a new vision which focus on employment, housing, homelessness, building community and opportunity along with focusing on addictions recovery services and advocacy. The Society worked closely with Interior Health to ensure addictions recovery and supported recovery housing options were available to women and men in Vernon. Interior Health also provided new winter funding for supports to reduce the number of visits to the hospital while connecting shelter clients with health services and needed supports. These two projects are slated to open in . Though this is an exciting time for our community, there is sadness in leaving the John Howard Society of Canada family. The John Howard Society has a long history of strong advocacy and amazing programs world wide. We will continue to meet those standards of service delivery and compassion and strive to reach new heights. We are looking forward to continuing our strong stakeholder partnerships and are excited about what the future holds.

Christina L Fedele How many times have you felt like your future was fogged by the hovering clouds of doubts, the battlefields of obstructions, and the questions of reason? Things seem so clear BUT every aspect of your life was distorted? I completely lose myself. One of my biggest downfalls seems to be my heart, when I care! I care completely and when I love.. I love explicitly and unconditionally. I try hard not to let things consume me but who can do that? This past few weeks has been dark, lonely and depressing for me. My world literally caved in over the last month. I keep looking for the turning point in life but I feel like I keep taking the fork in the road instead. I want to embrace certain moments and not let them go! I miss them and I need them like a car needs fuel. No one knows how someone else feels and I can only speak for myself not that this is acceptable but, my prayers stopped when I started doubting because of pain. I lost sight of prayer somewhere in the hovering clouds and battlefields of life. The struggle of my uncertainty belongs to me and God had nothing to do with it. When your lost in emotional turmoil, you need to pray! We have to be faithful in prayer and NOT lose our faith. Strength I believe is gained through our struggles. Each entry in this blog provides me with a new direction and purpose not only by providing insight through my own experiences but by different levels of self- improvement and awareness. Comments I am happy that Uber is still around and expanding. A lot of businesses are net transfers of wealth from the unrich to the rich, such as banks and their endless fees, paid by you and me to keep bank shareholders happy. Uber is owned by very wealthy private investors, the 0. What keeps the company alive is regular cash calls from investors who are apparently convinced Uber is to ride-sharing as Amazon is to digital retailing – an unstoppable force, a competition-killing monopoly in the making. Does their faith in Uber remain unshaken? Uber is eight years old and burning through eye-watering amounts of cash. And now, its executive ranks are in a shambles. Story continues below advertisement A string of scandals, including frat-boy sexist behaviour and the slow response to the killing of several of its drivers in Brazil, has finally triggered a thinning of the executive ranks. David Bonderman, a billionaire venture capitalist and Uber director, stepped off the board after making a sexist remark at a board meeting dedicated to eradicating sexist behaviour. If the loss of Mr. Others have hit the road, laying waste to Mr. If some or many of them say no, Uber might be in trouble. If they stay in and have to sell other tech investments to fund the cash call, the whole sector might come under pressure. It also has the dubious distinction of being one of the biggest money-losers of any company, public or private, tech or non-tech. Bloomberg said the enormous loss would put Uber, had it been listed on a stock exchange, among the top 10 biggest money-losers among public companies. The Uber model – lower pricing than regular taxis, the convenience of its app and deeming drivers to be self-employed – has put enormous pressure on licensed taxi services everywhere, slaughtering the value of taxi medallions in cities such as New York. Story continues below advertisement Story continues below advertisement But Uber does not have the power to artificially limit supply. The medallion taxis are cutting prices and some fleets are building their own Uber look-alike apps. In other words, there is no way that Uber is going to get a global monopoly – its costly retreat from China says as much. At the same time, some Uber drivers are taking the company to court to try to get employee-like protection, such as sick pay, paid holidays and minimum wages. Is that valuation justified? Maybe but maybe not, if you consider that Netflix does not have a lock on its subscribers, who could migrate to Amazon Prime or Hulu, a subscription video service backed by Disney, Fox and other entertainment heavyweights. But the problems at Uber tell you all may not be well in the tech world. Uber is revered as the most successful private tech company. Market corrections sometimes start where you least expect them. ## Chapter 5 : 5 reasons will be a turning point for Latin America | World Economic Forum

There are signs that September marked a turning point beyond which ex-U.S. assets, and EM particularly, should be due for a tactical bounce.

A Turning Point From a political standpoint, will go down as one of the most chaotic periods in recent U. Economically, on the other hand, was fairly ho-hum. This is a better showing than in , but a weaker one than the previous two years with exports and business investment looking stronger, while consumer spending has softened. And while output is up, job growth is weaker. Still, that annual growth represents more than 2 million new jobs created. While ho-hum may not excite, the sure and steady growth carries with it another advantage. In fact, this expansion likely will end up being the longest in U. Still, will be far from ordinary. The coming year will bring a number of important turning points, which will have far-reaching implications for the economy in the years ahead. Instead, the slowdown in employment growth stems from a lack of available workers. The labor shortage is hardly a surprise. Since the baby boomer generation, there has been a sharp slowing in the growth of the working age populationâ€”from 1. The labor shortage is being worsened by the clear antipathy that the current administration in Washington has toward immigrants coming to the United States. Despite all this, politicians continue to tout job creation in connection with almost any policy put forward, despite the lack of workers to fill these positions creating jobs is not the problem today. This labor shortage will benefit workers in terms of wage growthâ€”but also will slow economic growth in the years to come. Over the next decade, more than 40 million people will be added to the retirement rolls, and will begin receiving Social Security and publicly funded health care. This surge will cause a sharp increase in federal entitlement spending without a corresponding increase in the revenues to pay for them. This disparity is why the Congressional Budget Office was forecasting a sharp increase in debt levels even before the Republican tax plan emerged, a proposal that will take this bad situation and make it worse. Putting aside the clearly regressive nature of this plan, no credible economist on record believes the proposal will have anywhere near the growth impact needed to pay for itself. When will the federal debt become untenable? That is almost impossible to guess at, but what is clear is that we will look back at as the year the tide turned. As noted, one of the primary features of the tax proposal is that it will lead to more government borrowing, which is broadly stimulative to the economy. But such stimulus is only desirable when there is slack in the system. At this point, no such slack exists. This suggests instead that the stimulus will be reflected in the economy either through higher goods prices or higher asset prices. There is little sign of the former. Indeed, money supply growth has been decelerating lately. Such efforts will flatten the yield curve and slow lending. This will more than offset the modest stimulative effect of the tax cuts. On the surface, looks to be a lot like in terms of economic growth. But dig a little deeper and growing frictions become apparent. These will begin to create problems in the economy in or beyond. So enjoy the current economic calmâ€”before long, the ride is going to grow bumpy. Economic Stability in Midst of Social, Political Turmoil Late-night talk show hosts and others who find humor in political and social upheaval have had no shortage of material over the last year. The press and public alike have become accustomed to policy announcements via tweet from the White House, shocking revelations about public figures, and seemingly endless news about the chaotic state of affairs in our era. An array of evidence points to the fact that the California economy has been humming along nicely, and that is expected to continue in the coming year, although the state must face long-term challenges, and the sooner the better. Overall, nonfarm jobs grew 1. Construction has led the way with a 5. The only exceptions were Manufacturing, which was down marginally, and Mining and Logging, which has been reeling from weakness in the energy sector for some time. However, job gains overall and by industry have generally slowed significantly compared to recent years. With few exceptions, job gains by industry in have been less than in the previous three years. In particular, there has been a dramatic slowdown in job growth in the Information and Professional Scientific, and Technical Services industries that led the state in the early stages of its economic recovery. In recent quarters, the consumer-facing segments of the economy have experienced the most notable employment gains: To be sure, this slowdown is not symptomatic of a looming recession, but a shortage of workers. This has occurred as job openings across skilled and unskilled occupations alike have reached record high rates, based on data from the U. Bureau of Labor Statistics. Other measures point to continued progress in the state economy. California continues to be among the ranks of the faster-growing states, a constant source of surprise to its naysayers. Over the same period, nominal personal income grew by 3. The near-term picture looks good, but long-term problems require attention now. Home sales have edged up, but the statewide homeownership rate remains stubbornly low because of unaffordable high prices. At the same time, rents have increased steadily in many parts of the state in the face of low apartment vacancy rates. It should be no surprise that net domestic outmigration, already negative for several years, surpassed , persons annually over the last two years. The high cost of housing in California is driving workers out, especially low-wage earners. Based on estimates by Beacon Economics and others, the state should be adding approximately , new housing units annually, but is building about half that amount. Connecting the dots, if the state does not build enough homes, outmigration will continue, stunting both increases in the labor force and the growth potential of the California economy. The homeownership rate in California already is considerably lower compared to the United States as a whole, mainly because the median home price is more than twice that of the nation. Historically, middle-income households in California have been able to count on the deductibility of mortgage interest and property taxes to soften the blow. This will put the American Dream of homeownership further out of reach for more California residents. Yet another long-term concern is the gulf between pension obligations and pension funding for state and local governments, which has widened in recent years and will continue to do so over the foreseeable future. Jurisdictions face a difficult choice: They can divert current revenues to pay down pension obligations, but this may diminish services to residents and much-needed expenditures on infrastructure. A few communities have won tax hikes that will help support services and infrastructure investment, but they have been the exception rather than the rule. It is well-known that state revenues fluctuate widely with movements in the stock market. Each of these long-term problems can be addressed so as to stave off the worst consequences. But in each case elected officials and other stakeholders need to act now, while the economy is doing well, to tackle these challenges and ensure the long-run growth of California. This report was prepared by council chair Christopher Thornberg, Ph.

Another turning point may come from Argentina and Cuba, two countries that are shedding inward looking economic policies in favour of more openness and trade. Cuba has recently restored its diplomatic relations with long-time foe the United States of America.

Economic growth this year is expected to be a negative 0. Yet could be a turning point for many of the largest economies in the region. Here are five reasons why. Over the last 20 years, some 20, Colombians are estimated to have died in the conflict. Reuters Ahead of the World Economic Forum in Latin America , it looks like the longstanding conflict may finally be close to an end. In large parts of the country, people will again be able to live and work without having to worry about the rebellion. For manufacturers, investors and traders, too, an agreement would be positive, as it would create a safer and attractive environment to do business in. It could boost economic growth, which at 2. On the social front, the growth of the middle class has reversed, and people have taken to the streets to voice their discontent. On the political front, the news has been possibly even worse. After narrowly winning re-election in , President Dilma Rousseff almost immediately faced a political crisis. A corruption scandal involving many Brazilian politicians, including in her own party, eroded the trust of the public and parliament in her leadership. In May, the crisis culminated: While the fate of the President remains uncertain, investors seem to believe the worst is over for Brazil. Since Vice President Temer assumed the Presidency temporarily, the stock market has rebounded, and business confidence is on the up. The reason may be that business people and investors alike believe political change will bring about positive change in economic policies. Key financial and economic public functions in the country are now held by former business leaders and economists, including Central Bank governor Ilan Goldfajn , the former chief economist of Itau, and Finance Minister Henrique Meirelles. Argentina and Cuba re-enter the global economy after years and decades of isolationism Another turning point may come from Argentina and Cuba, two countries that are shedding inward looking economic policies in favour of more openness and trade. Cuba has recently restored its diplomatic relations with long-time foe the United States of America. That in turn should give a major boost to growth in Cuba, which has long championed health and education for all, while restricting the economic liberties of its population. It would be a welcome boost, but not an easy one to achieve. The private sector and cooperatives account for only a quarter of economic output, and even less in terms of employment. Argentina, meanwhile, is also continuing its economic reforms, and normalization of its relationship with the U. After defaulting on its debt a few years ago and undergoing a long, ongoing legal battle to deal with the consequences, may be the year Argentina can finally look to the future. He won the Presidential election last November, bringing a non-Peronist politician to the highest public office for the first time in 14 years. A big change is almost certain to happen in Venezuela The country that causes most concern in Latin America nowadays is Venezuela, a nation on the brink of economic collapse. As a consequence, the government now runs large budget deficits, faces rampant inflation, and has a severe shortage of basic imported goods including food and medicine. The country has some of the highest crime and murder rates in the world, often faces electricity shortages, and is experiencing political turmoil. But that vote, if it ever takes place, is not likely until Either the oil price remains low and the government could default or collapse, paving the way for a political transition, or oil prices rebound and the country gets more breathing space to service its debt and import food. All these changes could lead to a return to growth for the region If the previous four turning points become reality, Latin America as a whole could rebound from its worst economic performance since the Latin American debt crisis of The IMF in recent years has constantly revised its growth forecast for the region downwards. But the end of that negative cycle could be in sight. In its latest economic growth forecast, the Fund said it expected the region to experience 1.
