The continued development of technology will certainly subject human beings to greater indignities and inflict greater damage on the natural world. The arrest ended a seventeen-year hunt for a terrorist known as the Unabomber, who had killed three people with a series of mail bombs. His name was Theodore Kaczynski, a Harvard graduate who had a Ph. Kaczynski himself always denied that he was mentally ill. His father, Theodore Richard Kaczynski, worked in a sausage factory. His mother, Wanda, at first stayed at home; she later qualified for a teaching license and taught school for a few years. When he was seven, his parents had another son, David. The Kaczynski family lived in a modest neighborhood of working families. The father changed jobs several times, shifting from sausage making to working for companies that cut foam, like the kind used for furniture. For a while, the family lived in Iowa before moving back to a suburb of Chicago. When Kaczynski was nine months old, he had an allergic reaction and spent five days in the hospital. No one thought much of it at the time, but many years later, his mother wondered whether this separation from his family caused him to become withdrawn and less responsive. Wanda Kaczynski later remembered that her son tended to play alongside other children, rather than playing with them. She even briefly considered enrolling him in a psychological study on children suffering from autism. Autism is a mental disorder beginning in infancy. Its symptoms include an inability to interact socially, repetitive behavior, withdrawal from reality, and being absorbed in mental activities such as daydreams, fantasies, and delusions. Words to Know Anarchist: Feeling isolated in school In elementary school, Kaczynski seemed exceptionally bright. His mother had high hopes for her son, and she encouraged him to use a more adult way of speaking than the other children. Kaczynski remembered as an adult that by the time he was eight or nine years old, he did not feel accepted by other children. In the fifth grade, Kaczynski took an intelligence test and scored high enough that the school recommended he skip the sixth grade. Suddenly he was thrown into classes with older children, and he had an even greater sense of being a social outcast. Later in life, he remembered his classmates verbally abusing and teasing him. He remembered the growing dislike of the other students. But he did very well in his classes and skipped the eleventh grade as well. The school encouraged him to apply to Harvard University, which accepted him at age sixteen, two years earlier than most college students. At Harvard, the first signs of mental illness At Harvard, Kaczynski quickly realized that he was no longer smarter than everyone else. He did not make friends until his second year, and then only a few. At Harvard he had daydreams about living alone in the woods or becoming a revolutionary and rousing mobs to violence. After Harvard, Kaczynski entered the University of Michigan as a graduate student in mathematics. His academic work received high praise, but his social life was nonexistent. He lived alone in a rooming house. Kaczynski had no girl-friends, a fact that bothered him deeply. He once had fantasies of becoming a woman himself and visited a university health clinic to have the psychological evaluation required before having a sex-change operation. While waiting to see the psychiatrist, he suddenly felt ashamed and left. Walking away from the clinic, Kaczynski had what seemed like a revelation, a sudden realization of a new perception of reality. As I walked away from the building afterwards, I felt disgusted about what my uncontrolled sexual cravings had almost led me to do [undergo a sex-change operation], and I felt humiliated, and I violently hated the psychiatrist. Just then there came a major turning point in my life. Like a phoenix in mythology, a bird that burned to ashes only to be reborn, I burst from the ashes of my despair to a glorious new hope. I thought I wanted to kill that psychiatrist because the future looked utterly empty to me. And so I said to myself, why not really kill the psychiatrist and anyone else whom I hate? What is important is not the words that ran through my mind but the way I felt about them. What was entirely new was the fact that I really felt I could kill someone. My very hopelessness had liberated [freed] me because I no longer cared about death. I no longer cared about consequences, and I said to myself that I really could break out of my rut in life and do things that were daring, irresponsible or criminal. Turning a corner In the space of the short walk from the clinic, Kaczynski decided to go to Canada and live "off the country," alone in the woods. Before his visit to the psychiatrist, he had worried that he might be suffering from a mental illness. But on his walk he decided that his problems were all the fault of his family and the people around him. He began building a complicated explanation for his feelings. He blamed modern technology for his problems. Over time, he focused on genetics the study of how people and animals inherit their traits, such as eye and hair color and computers as specific technologies that were out to limit his freedom. He thought advertising was designed to control his mind. He also decided that he had been mistreated at home while he was growing up, although there has never been any outside evidence of this. Years later, a psychiatrist used these stories as evidence that Kaczynski was suffering from paranoia, a mental condition that causes people to imagine that others are out to harm them. For example, in his rooming house, he sometimes heard people talking downstairs and imagined that there was a visitor for him. When no one knocked on his door, he became convinced the rooming house manager had said something negative about him and driven away his visitor. In fact, there was no evidence of this. Moving into the woods After receiving his doctorate degree in mathematics from the University of Michigan , Kaczynski took a job teaching mathematics at the University of California in Berkeley, a highly respected university, in order to save enough money so he could buy land and go live alone in the woods. What makes a situation intolerable is the fact that in all probability, the values that I detest [hate] will soon be achieved through science, an utterly complete and permanent victory throughout the whole world, with a total extrication [removal] of everything I value. Through super human computers and mind control there simply will be no place for a rebellious person to hide, and my kind of people will vanish forever from the earth. Kaczynski taught at Berkeley from September until June , and then quit. It was the end of his academic career. He spent the next two years looking for land in Canada, Alaska, and finally Montana. There, he bought 1. With a little help from his brother David, Kaczynski built a one-room cabin measuring about 10 feet by 12 feet about 2 meters by 3 meters. The cabin had no electricity, no telephone, and no indoor plumbing. He got drinking water from a nearby creek. It was to be his home for the next sixteen years. In Montana, Kaczynski lived a dual life. To his neighbors, he was a hermit, a person who lives alone, away from civilization. He owned a car for a while, and later a pickup truck, but usually he used a bicycle or walked into town, and took a bus whenever he traveled. He grew a vegetable garden, gathered plants from the nearby woods, and hunted game for food. Residents of Lincoln got to know him and accepted his desire to live alone in the woods. Emergence of the Unabomber But there was another side to the hermit: The attacks were irregular; sometimes years would pass between one bomb and the next. Over time, the bombs became more complicated and deadlier. The first attack came on May 25, , when a package was found in a parking lot at the University of Chicago. The package was addressed to a professor in Troy, New York , and the return address indicated it was from Professor Buckley Crist of Northwestern University in the nearby suburb of Evanston, Illinois. It was odd that a package from a professor at North western addressed to someone at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute should have landed in a parking lot at a third school. Nevertheless, the package was sent to Crist, who became suspicious and called the campus police. John Harris, a student at Northwestern, was injured when he opened a package left in a common room at Northwestern. A bomb being carried as air mail exploded in the cargo hold of an American Airlines flight from Chicago to Washington, D. Smoke from the bomb forced the plane to make an emergency landing at Dallas, Texas. The bomb was in a wooden box, leading a U. Postal Service inspector to conclude that wooden boxes were the "signature" of the bomber. Percy Wood, the president of United Airlines, was injured by a bomb hidden in a hollowed-out book. A bomb was found at the University of Utah, similar to other attacks. This bomb was disarmed without hurting anyone. A bomb was delivered to the office of Professor Patrick C. Fischer at Vanderbilt University in Nashville, Tennessee. His secretary, Janet Smith, was injured while opening the parcel. Professor Diogenes Angelakos at the University of California at Berkeley noticed a strange device in the faculty lounge used by engineering and computer professors. When he moved it, it exploded, seriously injuring Angelakos. Three years after the previous attack, also at Berkeley, a graduate student and Air Force pilot named John Hauser noticed a three-ring binder lying in a computer lab. When he opened the binder, it exploded, seriously injuring him. A Boeing Aircraft office in Auburn, Washington, received a bomb, but it was disarmed without anyone being injured. The Unabomber claimed his first fatality when Hugh Scrutton, owner of the RenTech Computer Company in Sacramento, California, went to move a block of wood with nails sticking out of it, which was lying in his parking lot. When he picked up the block, it exploded. A secretary at a computer company in Salt Lake City , Utah, noticed a man wearing a hooded sweatshirt and aviator-style sunglasses putting something on the ground.

Douglas and Mark Olshaker "Amidst all the sound and fury surrounding the Italian murder trial of American student Amanda Knox, two people have been largely forgotten. One is the victim, Meredith Kercher, who was by all accounts a lovely, intelligent young woman full of great promise. Her murder was a terrible tragedy. The other is Rudy Guede—the actual murderer. This book shows that the evidence against Guede was overwhelming from the beginning. That he committed the crime alone, without help, is also beyond question. Guede was convicted in a fast-track trial and sentenced to 16 years in prison. But with time off for good behavior, he may be able to gain daytime release privileges as early as this year. Meanwhile, the endless judicial persecution of Amanda and her Italian friend and co-defendant, Raffaele Sollecito, continues unabated. Many people I speak to are still uncertain what to believe. They wonder if, perhaps, Amanda and Raffaele might have had something to do with the murder. Some people find it hard to accept that two completely innocent people could linger for so long under a cloud of suspicion, or that the criminal-justice system of a civilized European country could manufacture guilt out of thin air. Others have been influenced by the online industrial complex of Amanda-haters and conspiracy mongers, who have spread their falsehoods everywhere on the web. Many have made up their minds, but there are others who genuinely want to know the truth. Rudy Guede and the Murder of Meredith Kercher". But he has also devoted extensive energies to helping the wrongfully accused and convicted, including several inmates of death row. Eloquently and passionately, he speaks up not only for victims of crime—but for victims of the system itself. In fascinating and meticulous detail he recreates his ground-breaking findings in the investigation of the West Memphis Three and the bungled trial of Amanda Knox; how he reached his controversial conclusions in the JonBenet Ramsey murder; and his involvement in other historic, headline-making cases. Douglas reveals what happens when preconceived ideas, bias, superstition, and even media coverage obstruct a dispassionate pursuit of the evidence—and shows what we must do to avoid modern-day re-enactments of the Salem Witch Trials. Douglas and Mark Olshaker During his twenty-five year career with the Investigative Support Unit, Special Agent John Douglas became a legendary figure in law enforcement, pursuing some of the most notorious and sadistic serial killers of our time: Now, in chilling detail, the legendary Mindhunter takes us behind the scenes of some of his most gruesome, fascinating, and challenging cases -- and into the darkest recesses of our worst nightmares. Call the what you will Was Jack the Ripper actually the Duke of Clarence? Who killed JonBenet Ramsey? With uniquely gripping analysis, the authors reexamine and reinterpret the accepted facts, evidence, and victimology of the most notorious murder cases in the history of crime, including the Lindbergh baby kidnapping, the Zodiac Killer, and the Whitechapel murders. Utilizing techniques developed by Douglas himself, they give detailed profiles and reveal chief suspects in pursuit of what really happened in each case. The Cases That Haunt Us not only offers convincing and controversial conclusions, it deconstructs the evidence and widely held beliefs surrounding each case and rebuilds them -- with fascinating, surprising, and haunting results. Profiling criminals helps not only to capture them, but also helps society understand how these predators work and what can be done to prevent them from striking again. Douglas focuses especially on pedophiles and child abductors, fully explaining what drives them, and how to keep children away from them. As he points out, "The best way to protect your children is to know your enemy. Douglas once again takes us fascinatingly behind the scenes, focusing his expertise on predatory crimes, primarily against women. Kaczynski, the alleged Unabomber, they discovered what amounted to a one-room bomb factory. A dramatic and compelling true-crime psychological thriller By: Douglas and Johnny Dodd This incredible story shows how John Douglas tracked and participated in the hunt for one of the most notorious serial killers in U. assaulting and strangling a series of women, taunting the police with frequent communications, and bragging about his crimes to local newspapers and TV stations. After disappearing for nine years, he suddenly reappeared, complaining that no one was paying enough attention to him and claiming that he had committed other crimes for which he had not been given credit. When he was ultimately captured, BTK was shockingly revealed to be Dennis Rader, a year-old married man with two children. Douglas and Mark Olshaker Every crime is a mystery story with a motive at its heart. He not only takes us into the darkest recesses of the minds of arsonists, hijackers, bombers, poisoners, assassins, serial killers, and mass murderers, but also the seemingly ordinary people who suddenly kill their families or go on a rampage in the workplace. Douglas identifies the antisocial personality, showing surprising similarities and differences among various types of deadly offenders. Patterns and Motives By: Burgess, and Robert K. Ressler Who are the men committing the rising number of serial homicides in the U. The increase in these violent crimes over the past decade has created an urgent need for more and better information about these men: This authoritative book represents the data, findings, and implications of a long-term F. Data was obtained from official psychiatric and criminal records, court transcripts, and prison reports, as well as from extensive interviews with the offenders themselves. Featured in this book is detailed information on the F. Most disturbing was the hunting ground in which Robinson seduced his prey: Haunting chat rooms, targeting vulnerable women, and exploiting the anonymity of the Internet, his bloody spree was finally halted by a relentless parole officer who spent ten years trying to nail Robinson as a cold-blooded killer. Ressler This is the third edition of the landmark book that standardized the language, terminology, and classification used throughout the criminal justice system and allied fields use as they work to protect society from criminal behavior. The third edition tackles new areas affected by globalization and new technologies, including human trafficking and internationally coordinated cyber crimes; expands discussion of border control, The Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives ATF and Homeland Security; addresses the effects of ever-evolving technology on the commission and detection of crime, as well as new crime scene examples and analysis. Coauthored by accomplished experts in the field, it is the definitive crime classification text for law enforcement personnel, mental health professionals, forensic scientists, and those whose work brings them into contact with either offenders or victims of violent crime. The director of the FBI is dead. But before he can get started the government mysteriously yanks him off the case. MAN DOWN delivers page-turning action and a stunning denouement that will attract legions of new admirers to the world of Jake Donovan and his band of profilers. Mark Olshaker Blood Race is an exciting, well researched story about the Olympics and a German government plot to create super athletes through medical skullduggery to win Olympic gold medals. Mark Olshaker Why would people with diverse interests suddenly become obsessed with Physics? They discover the truth that they are the recipients of the brain of the most famous Physicist in the World, Albert Einstein. Follow their journey as their collective insight leads them to discoveries that Einstein did not live to see. Having written the PBS series Mind of a Serial Killer, Olshaker has taken his knowledge and crafted a totally convincing work whose unexpected twists and jolts make it unforgettable. Detective Cassandra Mansfield of the Washington, D. Mansfield races against time to find the killer before he strikes again. Mark Olshaker The commander of the Army virology unit that battled Ebola in The Hot Zone--and current director of Special Pathogens at the CDC--teams up with the bestselling co-author of Mind Hunter to chronicle his extraordinary thirty-year career fighting deadly viruses. He made very few friends, but excelled academically. He was only 16 when he was accepted into Harvard University. During his time at university he participated in a multiple year study that was conducted by Dr. The students who participated in this study were made to write a paper on their beliefs and goals and then were strapped to chairs and connected to electrodes. A lawyer would enter the room and belittle their beliefs while their reactions were recorded and later played back to them. Many people believe that this is one of the reasons that Kaczynski became emotionally unstable and began to dislike mind control. He graduated and became an assistant professor of mathematics at the University of California, Berkeley. Many undergraduates complained that Kaczynski was uncomfortable teaching and in Kaczynski handed in his resignation. Kaczynski moved in with his parents and 2 years later moved to a remote cabin in Montana that had no running water or electricity. Over time he began to realize that he could not be isolated or self-sufficient because of the development of companies around his area. He began to sabotage the developments around his cabin, but after discovering that his favorite wild spot had been replaced by a road, he decided to seek revenge against the companies and the people who ran them. Kaczynski began to send out homemade mail bombs in , at the age of His murder series began in , at the age of 43, and ended in All of his victims were murdered when they died from the injuries suffered from the homemade bombs that Kaczynski made and sent or dropped off. In total, there were 16 bombs that Kaczynski created, 23 people were injured and 3 were killed. Kaczynski would often put pieces of tree bark or branches inside of the bombs, which led investigators to believe that he had an obsession with wood. On April 3, , Kaczynski was arrested outside of his cabin. Investigators discovered bomb components and over 40, journal pages that contained bomb-making experiments. Kaczynski was able to avoid the death penalty by pleading guilty to the charges against him. He was found guilty and was sentenced to life in prison. The Zodiac Killer signed his letters with a distinctive mark that included a cross and a circle. The Boston Strangler tied his ligatures into birthdayâ€¦!
