When students visit an English-speaking country, they can sometimes be confused by some of these phrases. Click Here for Step-by-Step Rules, Stories and Exercises to Practice All English Tenses Sometimes the problems are because pronunciation is different in spoken English , and sometimes the problems are because English speakers use idioms that cannot be translated literally into another language. When you are learning everyday phrases, it is important to learn if they are formal, informal or slang. Here are some examples: Some important everyday phrases in English "How are you? People will often say the more informal: Sometimes you will come across these in spoken English. They are shortened forms of "going to," "want to," "could have," "should have" and "would have. Again, they are very informal. You will also hear the more informal expressions, "See ya! If you can start using this naturally in your English speech, you know you are making progress towards sounding like a native English speaker! Obviously these are all pretty general phrases and words, but there are many more that are used in particular situations. How can you start to increase your usage of natural English phrases? The most important thing is to listen. Listen to conversations between other people, listen to dialogue in movies, listen to radio talk shows, etc. A practical tip if you are living in a non-English speaking country: Set a goal of learning one or two new useful phrases from the next English speaking movie you watch. Spot a phrase that is commonly used in the movie and is also new to you. Clarify fully what it means. Use it a few times in sentences of your own. Learn some new phrases on the next movie! You get to see and write down how they are used. This can be very helpful. Many good dictionaries will tell you how formal a word or expression is. If the word is a swear word, the dictionary should tell you. It may have the abbreviation vulg for "vulgar" next to the definition. There are so many useful everyday phrases in English that no single article will be able to help you with all of them, so just listen and practice when you can.
