No records are available, but judging from recollections of the descendants of the builders of the Center Chapel, it is believed that the building was erected in the early to mid s. It was a neighborhood project and was constructed by volunteer labor and donated materials Previous to the erection of this building, worship services, Sunday School meetings, debates, singing school sessions, spelling bees, and lyceums were held in the Green schoolhouse. At the completion of the building, the Methodists and United Brethren held church activities there. For some years, the members of the two denominations worshipped jointly. Later, as their membership increased, the groups met separately. Each denomination had its own pastor. In , the Methodists moved their worship services to a building in Morley and in , built the present Morley First United Methodist Church. The United Brethren group continued to worship at the Center Chapel until mid when they dedicated their new church in Morley, the present Faith United Methodist Church. In , this small country church was well established and had a faithful attendance at its evening services and Sunday School Class Meetings. George Smith was laity pastor. The rostrum was rebuilt and a new carpet was added in A box social was held to help raise money for these expenses. All labor was donated. Reverend Sammy Weaver preached there several years. Clifford Pieper also preached there. In the mid-twenties prayer meeting was held on Wednesday evenings. According to news clipping, a thriving Sunday School was held there for a number of years. Great credit for these accomplishments was due to the devoted efforts of Mrs. Myrtle Bixler, and others of the neighborhood. In June , a most enjoyable and rewarding strawberry-and-ice-cream social was held on the church lawn. Harve Northey, who lived nearby and was a staunch supporter of the organization, donated his lovely home-grown strawberries. There was no limit to the servings of berries. The original Center Cemetery was located west of the Center church. It is uncertain just how far the original cemetery extended to the west. Senior citizens believe that the northwest portion of the present cemetery was a first addition. A later addition was purchased from W. In a new fence was built along the north side of the cemetery and in , along the south side. The corner posts were donated by Harlan Tallman. In the summer and fall of , considerable repair work was done on the building. Two coats of paint were applied by hand. The cost of this material and labor was met by the Cemetery Association and generous donations from interested people, far and near. At the meeting of the Center Cemetery Association in , the wage for sexton Frank Hughes was set at 30 cents per hour. Hughes had served as sexton for more than thirty years. At his retirement, his son, Albert Allie assumed these duties. This they donated to the Center Cemetery Association. Adapted from Morley Centennial Book of Some additional information on those buried after has been added by various submitters.

You can help by adding to it. At the time established thespians considered "the flickers" a rather base form of entertainment, but she was assured of its merits. Gish continued to perform on the stage, and in , during a run of A Good Little Devil , she collapsed from anemia. Lillian would take suffering for her art to the extreme in a film career which became her obsession. Her performance in these frigid conditions gave her lasting nerve damage in several fingers. Having appeared in over 25 short films and features in her first two years as a movie actress, Lillian became a major star, becoming known as "The First Lady of American Cinema" and appearing in lavish productions, frequently of literary works such as Way Down East. She became the most esteemed actress of budding Hollywood cinema. Griffith took his unit on location. He told Gish that he thought the crew would work harder for a girl. Work with MGM [ edit ] In Gish reluctantly ended her work with Griffith to take an offer from the recently formed MGM which gave her more creative control. She turned down the money, requesting a more modest wage and a percentage so that the studio could use the funds to increase the quality of her films [ edit ] hiring the best actors, screenwriters, etc. Her contract with MGM ended in Though not a box-office hit as before, her work was respected artistically more than ever, and MGM pressed her with offers to appear in the new medium of sound pictures. Of the former, she said, with pride, "I played a lewd Ophelia! She appeared in films from time to time for the rest of her life, notably in Night of the Hunter as a rural guardian angel protecting her charges from a murderous preacher played by Robert Mitchum. Gish made numerous television appearances from the early s into the late s. Her most acclaimed television work was starring in the original production of The Trip to Bountiful in In addition to her later acting appearances, Gish became one of the leading advocates of the lost art of the silent film , often giving speeches and touring to screenings of classic works. She was interviewed in the television documentary series Hollywood: A Celebration of the American Silent Film At the Cannes festival Lillian won a minute standing ovation from the audience. Some in the entertainment industry were angry that Gish did not receive an Oscar nomination for her role in The Whales of August. Gish herself was more complacent, remarking that it saved her the trouble of "losing to Cher. The last words of her long career were, "Good night. The episode "Marry for Murder" was broadcast on September 9, The episode dramatized the making of the film The Birth of a Nation. She was a special guest at the Telluride Film Festival in Personal life[ edit ] Lillian and her sister Dorothy, Gish never married or had children. The association between Gish and D. Griffith was so close that some suspected a romantic connection, an issue never acknowledged by Gish, although several of their associates were certain they were at least briefly involved. For the remainder of her life, she always referred to him as "Mr. She was a survivor of the flu pandemic , having contracted flu during the filming of Broken Blossoms. Gish designated Hayes as a beneficiary of her estate, with Hayes surviving her by less than a month. Political views[ edit ] Gish was a staunch Republican , and was a strong supporter of Ronald Reagan in the s. She was an active member of the America First Committee , an anti-intervention organization founded by retired General Robert E. Wood with aviation pioneer Charles Lindbergh as its leading spokesman. She said she was blacklisted by the film and theater industries until she signed a contract in which she promised to cease her anti-interventionist activities and never disclose the fact that she had agreed to do so. Her estate was valued at several million dollars, the bulk of which went toward the creation of the Dorothy and Lillian Gish Prize Trust. The All Movie Guide wrote of her legacy: A pioneer of fundamental film performing techniques, she was the first star to recognize the many crucial differences between acting for the stage and acting for the screen, and while her contemporaries painted their performances in broad, dramatic strokes, Gish delivered finely etched, nuanced turns carrying a stunning emotional impact. While by no means the biggest or most popular actress of the silent era, she was the most gifted, her seeming waiflike frailty masking unparalleled reserves of physical and spiritual strength. More than any other early star, she fought to earn film recognition as a true art form, and her achievements remain the standard against which those of all other actors are measured. Gish brought to her roles a sense of craft substantially different from that practiced by her theatrical colleagues. In time, her sensitive performances elevated not only her stature as an actress, but also the reputation of movies themselves.
