In 1943, his father was elected to the first of four terms in the United States Congress, and after moving with his family to Washington, D. In one of his first business ventures Buffett sold chewing gum, Coca-Cola bottles, and weekly magazines door to door. While still in high school, he made money delivering newspapers, selling golf balls and stamps, and detailing cars, among other means. Within months, they owned several machines in three different barber shops across Omaha. At 11, he bought three shares of Cities Service Preferred for himself, and three for his philanthropic sister Doris Buffett. In high school, he invested in a business owned by his father and bought a acre farm worked by a tenant farmer. He would have preferred to focus on his business ventures; however, he enrolled due to pressure from his father. He earned a Master of Science in Economics from Columbia in 1950. A hundred years from now they will still be the cornerstones of investing. Taking a train to Washington, D. Buffett wanted to work on Wall Street; however, both his father and Ben Graham urged him not to. He offered to work for Graham for free, but Graham refused. The average age of his students was more than twice his own. During this time he also purchased a Sinclair Texaco gas station as a side investment. However, this was not successful. The next year they had their first child, Susan Alice. Graham was a tough boss. He was adamant that stocks provide a wide margin of safety after weighing the trade-off between their price and their intrinsic value. The argument made sense to Buffett but he questioned whether the criteria were too stringent and caused the company to miss out on big winners that had other appealing features. In 1952, Benjamin Graham retired and closed his partnership. Buffett operated five partnerships that year. In 1953, the company grew to six partnerships and Buffett met future partner Charlie Munger. By 1954, Buffett operated seven partnerships. To avoid a proxy fight, the Board offered to repurchase shares at fair value, paying with a portion of its investment portfolio. He merged these partnerships into one. Buffett invested in and eventually took control of a textile manufacturing firm, Berkshire Hathaway. He began buying shares in Berkshire from Seabury Stanton, the owner, whom he later fired. This did not include the value of fixed assets factory and equipment. Buffett took control of Berkshire Hathaway at a board meeting and named a new president, Ken Chace, to run the company. In 1955, Buffett closed the partnership to new money. He later claimed that the textile business had been his worst trade. Buffett wrote in his letter: In 1956, Berkshire paid out its first and only dividend of 10 cents. Among the assets paid out were shares of Berkshire Hathaway. In 1957, Buffett began writing his now-famous annual letters to shareholders. Buffett became close friends with Katharine Graham, who controlled the company and its flagship newspaper, and joined its board. No charges were brought. Antitrust charges started, instigated by its rival, the Buffalo Courier-Express. Both papers lost money, until the Courier-Express folded in 1958. In 1959, Berkshire began to acquire stock in ABC. Federal Communications Commission ownership rules. The two companies also owned several radio stations in the same markets. A rogue trader, Paul Mozer, was submitting bids in excess of what was allowed by Treasury rules. Gutfreund left the company in August 1960. Greenberg at AIG in 1961. That may seem easy to do when one looks through an always-clean, rear-view mirror. Additionally, Buffett feared that inflation levels that occurred in the 1970s "which led to years of painful stagflation" might re-emerge. Alice Schroeder, author of Snowball, said that a key reason for the purchase was to diversify Berkshire Hathaway from the financial industry. I in no way anticipated the dramatic fall in energy prices that occurred in the last half of the year. But so far I have been dead wrong. Even if prices should rise, moreover, the terrible timing of my purchase has cost Berkshire several billion dollars. Very, very few people could appreciate the bubble. This unanticipated investment raised his stake in the company to around 5%. Buffett had said on numerous prior occasions that he would not invest in technology because he did not fully understand it, so the move came as a surprise to many investors and observers. At the Berkshire shareholders meeting in May 1968, Buffett explained that he did not expect to "move the needle" at Berkshire with newspaper acquisitions, but he anticipates an annual return of 10 percent. Buffett also advocated further on the issue of wealth equality in society: The obligation of a society as prosperous as ours is to figure out how nobody gets left too far behind. Buffett is recognized by communicators [89] as a great story-teller, as evidenced by his annual letters to shareholders. He warned about the pernicious effects of inflation: The inflation tax has a fantastic ability to simply consume capital. It makes no difference to a widow with her savings in a 5 percent passbook account whether she pays percent income tax on her interest income during a period of zero inflation, or pays no income taxes during years of 5 percent inflation. In addition to himself, Buffett named Walter J. Ruane Sequoia Fund, Inc. Buffett is skeptical that active management and stock-picking can outperform the market in the long run, and has advised both individual and institutional investors to move their money to low-cost index funds that track broad, diversified stock market indices. Buffett said in one of his letters to shareholders that "when trillions of dollars are managed by Wall Streeters charging high fees, it will usually be the managers who reap outsized profits, not the clients. By , the index fund was outperforming every hedge fund that had made the bet against Buffett by a significant margin. In an attempt to compete, he bought one of the diminutive instruments and has been playing it ever since. Buffett often plays the instrument at stock holder meetings and other opportunities. His love of the instrument led to the commissioning of two custom Dairy Queen ukuleles by Dave Talsma, one of which was auctioned for charity. They had three children, Susie, Howard and Peter. Their daughter, Susie, lives in Omaha, is a national board member of Girls, Inc. All three were close and Christmas cards to friends were signed "Warren, Susie and Astrid". Although his first wife referred to Nicole as one of her "adored grandchildren", [] Buffett wrote her a letter stating, "I have not emotionally or legally adopted you as a grandchild, nor have the rest of my family adopted you as a niece or a cousin. This act was a break from his past condemnation of extravagant purchases by other CEOs and his history of using more public transportation. Modeled on the Ryder Cup in golfâ€”held immediately before it in the same cityâ€”the teams are chosen by invitation, with a female team and five male teams provided by each country. He supported the hire of Bo Pelini, following the season, stating, "It was getting kind of desperate around here". The series features Buffett and Munger, and teaches children healthy financial habits. Buffett advises people to first create a list of the top 25 accomplishments they would like to complete over the next few years of their life, and to then pick the five most important items. Buffett said people need to "avoid at all cost" the initial, longer list, as this would impede the achievement of the top five. In April, Buffett an avid Coca-Cola drinker and investor in the company agreed to have his likeness placed on Cherry Coke products in China. Buffett was not compensated for this advertisement. He once commented, "I want to give my kids just enough so that they would feel that they could do anything, but not so much that they would feel like doing nothing". I have no problem in releasing my tax information while under audit. Trump -- at least he would have no legal problem.
