Newborn Baby Massage Tips 9 The newborn stage is tough enough as it is. Forget about hobbies or leisure time. And your baby takes up nearly all the hours of the day. Your baby has no sense of day or night when she was in the womb. Help her get into a routine by hanging darkening curtains, especially at night. But you really can breastfeed your baby AND work towards better, longer sleep! A bath may not be the most relaxing activity you can do with your baby, but baby massage is a VERY relaxing activity! Baby massage has been shown to help babies and parents! And you can finally enjoy the newborn months a little bit more. These are the milestones that parents are eager to share with family and friends. But they are not the only milestones your baby will achieve that first year. Each month, your baby will master important skills that serve as the building blocks for continued growth and development. Knowing when children typically achieve various milestones can help parents recognize developmental delays early on and seek appropriate care. Developmental milestones are divided into five categories: Examples of gross motor skills include controlling the head, sitting, standing, walking, running, jumping, and riding a bike. These skills require precision movements of the hands and fingers: Early language skills include communicating through facial expressions, body movements, crying, cooing, and laughing. Babies build on these early skills to develop the ability to communicate with words. Social and play skills. These skills are essential to interacting and playing together, as well as solving problems collaboratively. They include giving, sharing, taking turns, and engaging others in play. What they feel, see and hear at this time affects how their brain develops. Babies need warm, loving people to care for them and to respond to their needs kindly and consistently. They need to feel safe and secure in the world. This helps them to develop confidence and trust. In their first few weeks, babies like looking at faces. By the two weeks, most babies begin to recognise their parents. A health professional, usually a health visitor, will carry out a new baby review during these weeks. As a minimum, your baby should be weighed with no clothes on at birth and again at five and 10 days. They may feel content or uncomfortable but are not able to think about why they feel that way. From birth babies may: Watch your face when you talk to them Turn to the side to suck when their cheek is touched Blink at sudden noises such as hand claps or door slamming Open their eyes to normal speech sounds just as they doze off Suck well from breast or bottle. By 8 weeks they may: By 2-3 months they should follow your face or a moving light with their eyes. Watch your how their brain develops. Crying is a late sign of hunger. Doing, seeing and hearing Enjoy looking at people and bright objects Enjoy watching people do things React to familiar things by smiling, cooing and excited movements Turn their head to moderate sounds such as a normal speaking voice by 3 months Look at their own hands and play with their fingers by 3 months. Hold on to an object placed in their hand and briefly look at it Lift their head and chest when lying on their tummy Quieten or smile at the sound of your voice, or if they see you Turn their head or eyes towards you when you speak from beside or behind them. By 5-7 months Learning to talk Roll from their back to their tummy. Expect growth spurts during which your baby will want to breastfeed more often. Signs that your baby is ready include sitting up without support, controlling her head, bringing food to her mouth, and swallowing without choking. If your baby seems distracted during feedings, you may have more luck breastfeeding in a quiet place. Most 4-month-olds can see more clearly now and are fascinated by the world around them. Doing Swap small items from one hand to the other Pick up items with their thumb and one finger Bang objects together Roll from their back to their tummy Get into a crawling position on their hands and knees Start to look at and feel objects before taking them to their mouth Start to hold food such as a biscuit and feed themselves Look in the right direction for things that have fallen down Start to drink from a cup held by an adult by 6-9 months Move around more and roll and creep on their tummy by 8 months. At around 6 months of age, most babies are ready for solid foods. It can take 10 or more offerings before a new taste is accepted. If your baby is bottle-fed, begin to transition her from the bottle to a cup to reduce the risk of tooth decay. They learn and develop best when you spend time talking and playing with them. Many children celebrate their first birthday prior to taking their first step. Other children have mastered a handful of words before they turn. Keep in mind that every child develops at her own pace, and there is generally little need for worry or concern. And remember, the joy is in the journey. Like every aspect of raising a child, there are so many opinions out there and it can be difficult to decide what is best. This is a summary of my experience of both methods. Of course everyone is different, as is every baby. What is great for one person may not be for another. There are two basic approaches to weaning: I went down the traditional weaning route with Finn and I am now three months into weaning Rory using the baby-led method. Both have been a positive experience but have their pros and cons.

Tradition Weaning Advantages You know the amount of food eaten It was easier to ensure baby is gaining the right nutrients e. Our parents generation generally fed through purees so be prepared for the unsolicited advice from people who do and do not know you

Choking Baby Care Top tips to make feeding your baby easy: All you need to do is take a small portion of the family meal and process it in one of those little food processor bowls. Those kinds of products are absolutely fine to fall back on. Back when we were hunter-gatherers, we would have chewed the meat for our babies and ground certain foods between stones to make it easier to digest. Human babies take a long time to develop and become self-sufficient compared to other animals, so parents need to help them get enough nutrition out of food for quite a long time. Your goal is to offer her a variety of healthy choices and help her move toward a solid-food diet. Exactly how you do that is up to you and your child. A combination of methods works well for many families. Today, infant feeding involves matching good nutrition with individual developmental and intestinal readiness, which varies widely from baby to baby. Some babies eagerly take solids by six months, while others show little interest as late as nine to 12 months. In the early months, babies have a tongue-thrust reflex that causes the tongue to automatically protrude outward when any foreign substance is placed on it. This may be a protective reflex against choking on solids too early. Between four and six months this tongue-thrust reflex diminishes. Before six months of age many infants do not have good coordination of tongue and swallowing movements for solid foods. An added sign that babies are not to consume solid foods from birth is that teeth seldom appear until six or seven months, further evidence that the young infant is primarily designed to suck, rather than to chew. Research shows that starting solids before six months increases the risk of allergies. As such, paediatricians may discourage early introduction of foods especially if there is a strong family history of food allergies. Babies whose systems tend to be allergy-prone may show delayed willingness to accept solids. Babies are still producing low amounts of protective IgA in the early months, which does not reach peak production until they are around seven months. The usual advice is to wait until six months, but then you go to the supermarket and look at jars of baby food and it says suitable from four months. Some babies may even reach out to try and grab at your food, or imitate eating motions such as opening their mouths wide. Sometimes babies are more interested in the utensils than the actual food. Even better if baby has the ability to sit up in a high chair and pick up food with thumb and forefinger. All these are encouraging signs and good indications that baby may be ready to expand his diet beyond liquids.

Nine to 12 Months The previous stage was mainly to make the transition from liquids to solids, from sucking to mouthing, and chewing food. Most beginning eaters dabble a bit with foods, eating only a small amount of a few select solids. The move from milk to solid food should happen gradually with your baby slowly introduced to new foods. Initially, solids should take the place of one of the milk feeds. Then, over the next three or four months, introduce more solid food and cut down on the milk. Of course no two babies are the same and there are no rules regarding exact timing. If she is, keep her satiated with a bottle of milk. The tongue-thrust reflex is nearly gone, the gag reflex diminished, and swallowing is more coordinated. Weaning strategies As mentioned, all babies are different in their progress, and knowing when your baby is ready for solids usually depends on monitoring your baby. When starting new foods, you only do it one day at a time, and one food at a time. When introducing baby to something new, observe your child for a few days to see if they experience any stomach problems, any rashes, or any kinds of allergic or dangerous reactions. Keep a food diary to record meals and other important notes if necessary.

Six to Nine Months Breast milk or commercial formula with iron or a combination of the two contains all the essential nutrients your baby needs for the first six to nine months. Consider solid foods as an addition to, not a substitute for, breast milk or formula. This cereal is easy to swallow and digest and is usually a powdery substance that is mixed with milk or formula.

Keep in mind some paint finishes may be dulled or damaged by a particular method, so test a small area of the surface first. Watch for paper discoloration as well as paper fiber damage. Things like WD and solvents of any kind may leave stains behind, so take your time finding the right solution, the non-washable varieties are especially tricky I did add some tips to the bottom of this page. Toothpaste regular pasteâ€™not gel. This one is my first pick always good old regular Crest , it also helps get rid of permanent marker stains pretty easily. Artgum Eraser â€™ gently rub on marks in a circular motion, can also try a regular pencil eraser. Done carefully, this might be an option for wallpaper. Baking Soda â€™ make a paste with water and use it to gently rub into the mark. You could also just sprinkle baking soda on a damp sponge and rub. Baby Oil â€™ apply directly to area then rub off. Mayonnaise â€™ Glob some on then scrub a bit in a circular motion, then wipe off. Shaving Cream â€™ apply, rub in, then wipe off. WD â€™ spray some on the marks then rub off with a soft cloth. Wipe surface with hot soapy water when done. Turpentine â€™ dab some on a damp cloth and wipe into spot. Lighter Fluid â€™ apply as you would turpentine. Goo Gone â€™ Same directions as for turpentine. Ammonia â€™ soak a section of cloth in household ammonia then rub into area. You may also luck out with an ammonia based cleanser like Windex and a hot soapy cloth. Vinegar â€™ soak a toothbrush in white vinegar and scrub. Heat â€™ Take a hair dryer to the markings and allow it to heat the wax. Wipe wax off with a hot, soapy cloth. Place a few paper towels between the surface and the iron. Hand Lotion â€™ rub into marks then wipe off. Powdered Dishwasher Detergent â€™ make a paste with water and gently scrub area. Some detergents contain bleach so be careful on wallpaper. Powdered Household Cleaners â€™ such as Ajax or Comet. Mix with some water or sprinkle on a damp sponge then wipe gently. Non-stick Cooking Spray â€™ just spray it on then wipe off the marks. Not the best solution for wallpaper since this could leave a grease mark. Hairspray â€™ spray generously on surface then wipe off. Rubbing Alcohol â€™ Saturate part of a cloth then rub. Moist Baby Wipe Towelettes â€™ Rub directly on the markings to lift them off. More Tips Here are a few tips dealing with wallpaper stains: Source page no longer available online Crayon: If thick amount left, scrape off excess with table knife. Do not clean walls by this method! Use only on small spots. For washable papers, use sudsy sponge after lifting grease. Do not smear the residue. After applying the treatment, make sure to completely wipe off any cleaner or residue with hot soapy water.
