

Chapter 1 : 8 Things to Know Before Going on Your First African Safari

You can book hotel rooms, cruises, vacation packages that include airfare, get great deals on activities during your vacation – ring a bell? Well, I have something else to share with you today. Sunny Isles beach is commonly referred to as the Florida Riviera, and it is quite lovely! I think that sometimes we take the beauty right there in our own backyard for granted. About Sunny Isles Beach Sunny Isles Beach experienced a renaissance in the late s, when the main thoroughfare, Collins Avenue, transformed from a rambling row of motels into a luxury strip of oceanfront high-rises and resorts. The city lies halfway between Miami and Fort Lauderdale, with 2. Starting daily at 9: Samson Oceanfront Park is a family-friendly escape within walking distance of the resort. Even closer, Jet Ski King rents jet skis, banana boats, and waverunners for adventures on the Atlantic Ocean. Okay, so that sounds pretty amazing, right? Sounds like a steal, right?! Hey, I told you that you could stretch your travel budget farther with Groupon Getaways! You can also find all-inclusive resort stays, sightseeing tours, cruises, as well as vacation packages that include airfare, hotel stays, meals and tours. Of course, every package is different, but there are so many options! South Africa, to be exact. While we usually spend Spring Break cruising or hitting the local beach, this year she and I are heading to South Africa to cross another adventure off of our bucket list: Photo Courtesy of Groupon Getaways She wants to be a zoologist when she grows up and her favorite animals are all found in Africa! Angeline and I found a Groupon under the South Africa region for cage diving with great white sharks, so we are redeeming some Groupon Bucks for that activity! I am SO excited! We are also booking a tour of the peninsula through Africa Answers, the tour company that offered this Groupon Getaway. More than 2, penguins dwell amid these giant boulders; the best place to catch a glimpse of them is from atop the Foxy Beach boardwalk. Party like a local: Watch the sun set behind the Indian Ocean while sipping a drink, or sundowner, on a restaurant terrace in Camps Bay. It includes a full breakfast and sparkling wine. A cradle of civilization: Get a massage at the award-winning spa, see a dance show put on by local tribes, and learn the art of African drumming at Ivory Tree Lodge before retiring to your spacious room, which is outfitted with a sophisticated African decor. You simply purchase the Groupon then call the telephone number for the hotel or tour company with your Groupon in hand to give them your confirmation number. I recommend being very thorough and timely when doing this, and if you do not receive your confirmation for your package over the phone, or receive it immediately via email, CALL BACK. As my tour company only sold a limited number of Groupon Getaways for this trip, the original dates I wanted were sold out by the time I had my Groupon Getaways confirmation in hand. It took a few days for them to confirm dates for me, which was frustrating, but the key was to keep calling them and make sure that everything was progressing smoothly. If your Groupon Getaways includes airfare, I recommend requesting your booking confirmation number and e-ticket number as soon as possible. Keep in mind that the seats booked on your behalf may not be the seats you would book for yourself. I recommend looking into that option before purchasing additional tours from the tour operator. Remember the more money you save on each activity, the more activities you can do! Have you ever taken a trip using Groupon Getaways?

Read the full disclosure policy here. Ever since I was a little kid flipping through the pages of my Zoobooks, I knew that someday I wanted to travel to Africa and go on a safari. I wanted to see wild lions and herds of zebra and big-eared elephants - probably not much different than what many of you have dreamed of. My first safari experience was in South Africa with my dad, where we went on 2 private game drives per day in Kruger National Park. I then traveled overland with Acacia Africa and went on self-drive game drives in Etosha National Park in Namibia, a walking safari in the Okavango Delta, and both land and water-based game drives in Chobe National Park in Botswana. Hippos in the Chobe River in Botswana Regardless of how you go on safari, though, I think there are some things worth knowing before you go. And this means that you can expect some very early starts to your safari game drives. In South Africa, our morning game drives would begin between 5: This timing was great because it meant we got to see the sunrise, as well as all the animals that are more active in the early morning hours. Every game drive is different Thinking of skipping one of those early morning game drives in order to sleep in a little longer? Take the game drives I went on in Kruger National Park. On one drive, we saw a month-old baby rhino with its mother, and two male lions challenging each other over territory; on another we watched a huge herd of elephants playing in a riverbed, and then caught a pair of lions mating; and on another drive our very last one in Kruger we saw a pack of super-rare wild dogs challenging a group of hyenas. Mama and baby white rhino in Kruger Wild dogs vs. In Chobe, for example, we got to get up close to hippos safely in a boat, and even got to watch elephants swimming! You might miss the best sighting of your whole safari! For example, I was dying to see a big herd of zebra on safari, but we only spotted one lone zebra in Kruger. I had to wait to go to Etosha National Park in Namibia to finally see the zebra herds of my imagination. The rooms and food were amazing, the staff was so friendly, and many of the rooms have a view out over a riverbed - meaning you can see wildlife without going anywhere. The highlight here was the watering hole right on the edge of the camp that was lit by floodlights after dark. We saw elephants, rhinos, giraffes, and more come to drink after dusk just a few steps away from where we were camping. The rangers who work in the parks and especially for the private game lodges are extremely good at what they do. They are also very good at communicating with other rangers in the area to find out where the best sightings are taking place. During my stay at the Jock Safari Lodge, though, we were assigned the head ranger for the duration of our stay, and he acted as both our driver and spotter the whole time. We trusted him completely when it came to choosing routes through the park and deciding when to leave animals in peace. Look how close we are to these rhinos! But the answer is simple: This is how you can roll up next to a sleeping pride of lions without waking them, or drive next to a huge elephant without scaring it away. Conversely, if you approach an elephant on foot, it sees you as a threat and will likely run. Just to be safe, I brought my ExOfficio BugsAway jacket with me, which is a mesh jacket infused with mosquito repellent. Sun protection - Lastly, you can always get sunburnt, even in the winter months. That way everything from lost luggage to a bad accident is covered - because you just never know! I recommend World Nomads for basic and really affordable travel insurance. This was SUCH a good investment, as most of my safari photos were taken on this lens. Most people in my tour group just used their smartphones for photos. Check out these tours that will include safaris like the ones I went on: Are there any other tips you would give to first-timers?
